First Part: Evolutionary Era of Islam in Subcontinent

1. Evolution of Muslim Society

Introduction

- The arrival of Islam in the subcontinent was a unique event that facilitated a deep interaction between Arab Muslims and the local Indian population.
- This interaction was not a sudden occurrence but a gradual process taking place over many centuries, eventually leading to the formation of the Indo-Muslim civilization.
- The spread of Islam is often described as a blend of divine revelations and the influence of indigenous culture.

Point of View of Aziz Ahmad

Scholar Aziz Ahmad identifies three distinct phases regarding the arrival of Muslims in the subcontinent:

- i. Indo-Arab Trade Relationship:
 - Long before the rise of Islam, Arabs and Indians maintained strong economic ties, as Arabs were a nation of merchants who traveled the world's trade routes.
 - Arab traders initially settled along the Malabar coast; after their conversion to Islam, these temporary residences became permanent settlements.
 - This pre-Islamic relationship served as an "invisible force" that eventually allowed Islamic culture and religious obligations to take root in these coastal communities.
- ii. Expanding Wave of Muslim Conquest:
 - During the Umayyad dynasty, the Islamic empire expanded geographically as generals were sent to various parts of the world.
 - In the 8th century, Mohammad bin Qasim was sent by Hajjaj bin Yousaf to conquer Sindh, establishing the first direct land link between Arab and Indian civilizations.
 - Sindh subsequently became known as "Bab-ul-Islam" (The Door to Islam) for the people of the subcontinent.
- iii. Organized Form of Muslim Arrival:
 - Between the 11th and 16th centuries, a "conquest-cum-immigration" movement occurred as Muslims arrived from North Asia via Afghanistan.
 - Key figures in this phase included Mahmood Ghazni, who integrated Punjab into the Ghazna Empire, and Mohammad Ghauri, who established an early Islamic state.
 - This organized society was further consolidated by the Delhi Sultanate and later the Mughal Empire, which expanded Muslim rule across central and southern India.

Factors for Emergence of Muslim Society

The sources highlight several evolutionary factors that gave birth to a distinct Muslim society in the region:

- i. Islamic Teachings:
 - Islam provided a comprehensive solution to all questions of life based on the Quran and Sunnah, which was previously unavailable in the region's existing religious frameworks.
 - As a universal religion, its message was not restricted to any specific race or territory but was grounded in broad human values.
 - Islam maintained a balance between individualism and collectivism, viewing spirit and matter as an integrated whole rather than separate compartments.
- ii. Great Appeal to Down-Trodden Classes:

- The arrival of Islam appealed deeply to the neglected sections of Indian society, particularly those deemed "unfit" by the existing caste system.
- The rigid Hindu class structure (Brahmins, Vaish, Khashtaris, and Shudras) provided privileges to the upper classes while denying the Shudras representation or a voice.
- Islam's message of complete equality offered a sense of hope and dignity to millions of "untouchables" who were previously deprived of religious and social status.
- iii. Administrative System of Muslim Rulers:
 - Muslim rulers established a welfare state system in India, following Islamic principles such as Zakat, Fisl, and Sadqat.
 - They took a keen interest in education, establishing numerous madrastas and educational institutions that provided free learning to the public.
 - Special grants and scholarships were offered to eminent teachers, and even the children of nobles were often taught by private "Muallims".
- iv. Patronage of Muslim Rulers:
 - The rulers played a decisive role in strengthening Muslim society by defending the empire's sovereignty through successive military campaigns.
 - Rulers like Muhammad bin Tughluq encouraged Muslim settlement in southern India, permanently influencing the region's demographics.
 - State patronage also extended to the flourishing of various economic sectors, including agriculture, industry, and commerce.
- v. Role of Sufis:
 - Sufis and saints were instrumental in the peaceful propagation of Islam, often concentrating in areas away from the political centers of power.
 - They introduced the system of "Silsalahs" (orders) and "Khanqahs" (hospices), which served as meeting places and centers for spiritual training.
 - By spreading the message of Sulha-i-kul (peace and unity for all), Sufis like Data Gunj Bakhsh and Moin-ud-din Chishti provided a humanitarian appeal that attracted thousands to the faith.

Conclusion

- The advent of Islam led to a gradual transformation that resulted in the unique Indo-Muslim civilization.
- This was not a sudden shift but a steady production of a new Islamic society within the subcontinent.
- Ultimately, the recognition of their separate religious and cultural entity led Muslims to raise their voices for an independent state of their own.

5. Role of Sufis in Spread of Islam in the Sub-continent

1. Introduction

- Islam in the subcontinent was not spread primarily through political power, as evidenced by the fact that the heaviest concentration of Muslim populations was often away from metropolitan centers like Delhi, Agra, and Lahore.
- Instead, it spread through the peaceful missionary activities of Sufis, who led a spiritual movement seeking the mystic realization of God.
- While figures like Hazrat Sheikh Ismail and Hazrat Ali Hujweri arrived during the Ghaznavid period, Sufism became a formal institution in the 12th and 13th centuries.
- By introducing the system of "silsilah" (orders) and "khanqah" (lodges), Sufis invested the movement with a sense of brotherhood and established meeting places for spiritual training.

2. Preaching of the Sufi Saints in India

- i. Message of Sulha-i-kul (Unitedness for all): Sufis in Delhi and Multan preached a message of universal peace and unity, offering spiritual sustenance to all who came to them regardless of their religious dogmas.
- ii. Humanitarian: Their efforts were dedicated to the service of humanity, with the prime objective of realizing Islamic principles of respect for all human beings.

- iii. Propagation of Sound Character: Sufis stressed the importance of sound character, which was visible in their own lives of piety and indifference to worldly riches.
- iv. Voice for Human Rights: The message of the Sufis provided "breathing space" for those denied human rights by the privileged classes of the time.
- v. Evils of the Hindu Caste System: Sufis countered the iniquitous system that divided society into exclusive classes (Brahmins, Kshatriyas, etc.) and relegated the majority to an inferior position.
- vi. Great Appeal to Down-trodden Classes: Islam's message of complete equality, brought by the Sufis, offered hope to the "untouchables" and Shudras who were previously deprived of dignity.
- vii. Liberating Mission of Islam: Through their simple, unassuming lifestyle and devotion to God, Sufis fulfilled the liberating and humanitarian mission of Islam.
- viii. Custodians of Religion: While Ulema were the custodians of religion in the cities, Sufis worked assiduously in obscure rural areas to preserve the inner spirit of Islam and win thousands of converts.
- ix. Role of the Khanqahs: These hospices provided an ideal atmosphere for meditation and served as meeting places where visitors could benefit from the company and teachings of the saints.

3. Types of Silsalahs

- There were four prominent orders of sainthood in India: Nakshbandia, Suharwardia, Qadiriya, and Chistia.
- The Qadiriya order was founded by Sheikh Abdul Qadir Jilani and popularized in India by saints like Hazrat Mian Mir.
- The Chistia order, brought by Khawaja Moin-ud-din Ajmeri, became perhaps the most widespread and influential order in the subcontinent.

- Their legacy provided the foundation for a separate religious entity that eventually led to the demand for an independent state.

5. Exponents of Faraizi Movement

- Key leaders included Haji Shariatullah (the founder), his son Dadu Miyan (Mushin al-Din Ahmad), Abdul Ghaffar (Naya Miyan), Syed ud-din Ahmed, and Rashid-ud-din Ahmed (Badshah Mian).

- Peasantization: It began a wave of "peasantization" where thousands of weavers met the threat of unemployment by moving into agriculture.

10. Causes of Failure of the Movement

- Inflexibility of Leaders: The rigidity of the leadership created misunderstandings with the common people.
- Conspiracies of Opponents: European planters and Hindu Zamindars conspired against the movement; British policies like the Permanent Settlement further entrenched the power of Hindu landlords.
- British Intelligence: Improved government methods for collecting information in remote interior regions ended the "benefit of peripheral wilderness" the Faraizis had enjoyed.
- Lack of Military Force: Their non-violent nature and lack of military organization made them unable to implement their agenda by force.
- Water Regime Deterioration: As the movement relied on waterways, changes in river systems and navigation problems disrupted their communication network.

10. The Two Nation Theory (Muslim Separation)

1. Introduction

- The Muslim political movement in the subcontinent revolved around the Two-Nation Theory, which provided the conceptual dynamics for the struggle for independence.
- The theory asserts that India was never the abode of a single nation; rather, it was inhabited by multiple nations, of which Hindus and Muslims were separate and distinct.
- This separateness was grounded in their unique art, architecture, traditions, and sense of participation.

2. Concept of a Nation

- Politically, a nation is defined as any group of people, whether diverse or homogeneous, that has established a state or possesses a desire for statehood.
- The French philosopher Renan described a nation as a "soul" or "spiritual principle" constituted by a shared past of rich memories and a present will to live together.
- In Islam, nationhood is ideological, based on religious unity rather than geography or race.
- Allama Iqbal defined a nation as a "unity of thought" provided by religious ideology, while Hertz argued that consciousness of nationhood is its primary prerequisite.

3. Nation in the Indian Context

- The consciousness of two separate nations in India can be traced back 1,000 years to Al-Beruni, who noted in Kitab-ul Hind that Muslims and Hindus were two different nations.
- i. Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and Two-Nation Theory:
 - The credit for expounding the theory in its modern form goes to Sir Syed, who first addressed Muslims as a "Qaum" (Nation).
 - During the Urdu-Hindi controversy (1867), he stated it was impossible for the two nations to progress as one or join wholeheartedly in any endeavor.
- ii. Allama Muhammad Iqbal and Two-Nation Theory:
 - Iqbal expounded the theory unambiguously in 1930, arguing that Muslims were more homogeneous than any other group in India.
 - He called for Muslims to declare themselves a separate cultural entity and eventually proposed the amalgamation of Punjab, N.W.F.P., Sindh, and Baluchistan into a single state.
- iii. Quaid-i-Azam and Two-Nation Theory:
 - Jinnah provided the most emphatic exposition, stating in 1940 that Muslims are a nation by any definition and must have their own territory and state.
 - He emphasized that Hindus and Muslims belong to two different civilizations based on conflicting ideas, noting that they neither inter-marry nor inter-dine.

4. Historical Evidence

- i. Religious Difference:
 - The two groups were diametrically opposed: Islam is a divine, monotheistic, and iconoclastic religion, while Hinduism is characterized by man-made polytheism.
- ii. Political Difference:
 - Islam is essentially democratic and favors majoritarian rule, whereas the Hindu caste system established that the right to rule was reserved for upper classes (Brahmins and Khastries).
 - Muslims feared being subjected to a "tyrant rule" or "Ram Raj" under a permanent Hindu majority.
- iii. Cultural Difference:
 - Both nations drew inspiration from different sources of history; the hero of one was often the foe of the other.
 - They possessed distinctive outlooks on life, literature, art, and even nomenclature.
- iv. Economic Difference:
 - Islam is a "proletariat faith" that abhors the concentration of wealth and encourages fair distribution via Zakat, while Hinduism was viewed as a capitalistic religion that practiced usury.
 - Muslims faced systematic discrimination in jobs and economic opportunities.

5. Evolutionary Factors

- i. Hindu Exclusiveness and Muslim Separateness: Both groups tended to maintain exclusive identities and failed to produce a sensible fusion even after 1,000 years of coexistence or under British rule.
- ii. Clash of Revivalist Movements: The theory gained momentum from the clash between Hindu revivalist movements (like Arya Samaj) and Muslim ones (like the Aligarh and Jihad movements).
- iii. Impact of British Rule: British rule established administrative unity and a discourse on nationalism, but also created a realization among Indians that they had lost power, providing impetus to Muslim separatism.
- iv. Introduction of British Institutions: Muslims apprehended that the Westminster model of representative government would place them under permanent Hindu majoritarian rule.
- v. Congress' Anti-Muslim Policies: The Indian National Congress was viewed as an exclusive Hindu party whose policies were antithetical to Muslim interests.
- vi. Apprehensions of Muslim Salariat Class: As noted by Hamza Alvi, the Muslim "salariat" class feared they could not compete with Hindus in education and social development, leading them to unite under the Muslim League.
- vii. Role of Personalities: Figures like Mujadid Alf Sani, Shah Waliullah, Sir Syed, Iqbal, and Jinnah played pivotal roles in enlightening Muslims about their separate identity.
- viii. Role of Historical Dynamics: Events like the rejection of Muslim demands in the Nehru Report and the "atrocities" of the Congress Ministries (1937-39) solidified the demand for separation.

6. Significance of Two-Nation Theory

- i. Basis of Indian Identity: It provided the foundation for an individual and collective Muslim identity in the subcontinent.
- ii. Political Consciousness: It gave Muslims a separate entity, prompting them to organize for political representation through the All-India Muslim League.
- iii. Conceptual Dynamics to Pakistan Movement: It served as the primary driving force and rationale for the demand for a separate state.
- iv. Basis of Ideology: The theory laid the foundation for the Ideology of Pakistan, as both are rooted in Islamic principles.
- v. Smashed the Myth of Common Nationality: It emphasized that the subcontinent was composed of various distinct nationalities rather than a single Indian nation.

- vi. Provided Solution for the Communal Problem: It offered a practical, albeit final, solution to the long-unresolved conflict between Hindus and Muslims.

7. Conclusion

- The Two-Nation Theory was the basis for Muslim nationhood, while the Ideology of Pakistan (which evolved from it) became the basis for statehood.
- By the 1940s, this historical consciousness had evolved into a specific political ideology that made the creation of Pakistan inevitable.

11. Ideology of Pakistan

1. Introduction (Meaning of Ideology)

- The term "ideology" is derived from the words 'ideas' and 'logos,' which essentially means a system of ideas.
- It was coined by the French philosopher Destutt de Tracy, who described it as "a science of ideas with a mission".
- In a general sense, ideology refers to a set of ideas, a system of collective thoughts, or a specific programme for life.
- Ideology provides the main rationale and raison d'être (reason for existence) for the Pakistan movement.

2. Significance of Ideology

- Ideology is a crucial subjective factor in nation-building, acting as a binding force that unites people of various races and ethnic backgrounds under a single platform.
- It provides the self-consciousness of being one, which is a recognized prerequisite for the existence of a nation.
- The worth of an ideology is dependent upon the level of commitment people have toward it.
- In Islam, the concept of nationhood is essentially ideological, providing the "unity of thought" that defines the community.

3. The Main Components of the Ideology of Pakistan

- i. Islamic Ideology: This is the aggregate of the collective teachings of Islam as provided by the Quran and Sunnah, aimed at developing a society based on these divine injunctions.
- ii. Universalism of Islam: Islam is a universal religion whose message is meant for all of humanity rather than a specific race, territory, or community.
- iii. Humanism: Islamic ideology is enshrined in human values and caters to the requirements of all human beings, emphasizing humanistic values over individual characteristics.
- iv. Islam is a Complete Code of Life: Islam does not divide life into watertight compartments like divine, material, or spiritual; instead, spirit and matter, or church and state, form an integrated whole.
- v. Two Nation Theory: This component asserts that Hindus and Muslims are two distinct nations and that the subcontinent was always inhabited by at least two separate nationalities.

4. Interpretation of Ideology of Pakistan

- It signifies that Pakistan was created as a state where Muslims could preserve their separate cultural identity.
- It reflects the desire of Muslims to order their lives according to the teachings of the Quran and Sunnah.
- It means providing complete freedom and religious liberties to Muslims in a conducive environment to implement Islamic teachings.
- In its truest sense, the Ideology of Pakistan is considered synonymous with Islamic Ideology.

5. Ideology in the Light of Founders' Perception

- Allama Iqbal: In 1930, he stated that Muslims are the most homogeneous group in India and should unequivocally declare themselves a separate cultural entity. In 1932, he emphasized infusing Islam into individual and collective life to create a strong country.
- Quaid-i-Azam: In 1940, Jinnah asserted that Muslims are a nation by any definition and must have their own territory and state. In 1941, he explicitly declared that the "Ideology of the Muslim League would be Islam".

6. Evolution of Ideology of Pakistan

- The evolution began when the first non-Muslim embraced Islam in the subcontinent, as it provided a new, surviving ideology.
- The realization of the need for a separate ideology intensified in the 19th century under the pressure of British subjugation.
- This led to two major responses: traditionalists (Ulema) who wanted to purge India of un-Islamic influences, and modernists who sought a territorial state based on Islamic ideology.
- By the 1930s, the popularity of partition proposals provided the final impetus for the Two Nation Theory to evolve into a specific political ideology.

7. Evolutionary Factors of Ideology / Why Pakistan was Created

The sources list the following as primary factors that led to the creation of Pakistan:

- i. Ideological conflicts between Islam and Hinduism.
- ii. Impact of revivalist movements like those of Mujadid Alf Sani and Shah Waliullah.
- iii. Impact of British rule, which established a discourse on nationalism.
- iv. Role of Muslim personalities such as Sir Syed, Iqbal, and Jinnah.
- v. British representative institutions and Muslim fears of permanent Hindu majoritarian rule.
- vi. Cultural factors, including the Urdu-Hindi controversy.
- vii. Desire for the formation of a separate state to protect Muslim interests.
- viii. Historical factors and the realization of lost political power.
- ix. Pan-Islamic consciousness connecting Indian Muslims to the wider Muslim world.
- x. Role of the Muslim press (e.g., Comrade, Al-Hilal, Zamindar).
- xi. Sagacity of Jinnah's politics and his ability to unite the community.
- xii. Role of Congress ministries (1937–39) and their perceived atrocities against Muslims.
- xiii. Impact of the 2nd World War, which weakened British control and heightened the need for Muslim support.

8. Significance of Ideology of Pakistan

- It provided the fundamental basis for the establishment of an independent, separate state.
- It crushed the myth of "uni-nationalism" in a united India by emphasizing distinct nationalities.
- It serves as a "beacon of light" for the state, as it was projected into the constitutional framework of Pakistan (e.g., the Objective Resolution).

9. Difference Between Ideology and Two Nation Theory

- The Two Nation Theory is historically older, tracing back to the 7th century, while the Ideology of Pakistan was born in the 19th century.
- The Two Nation Theory is the basis of the Ideology of Pakistan, not the other way around.

- The Two Nation Theory is the basis of nationhood (identity), whereas the Ideology of Pakistan is the basis of statehood (governance).
- The Two Nation Theory provided the rationale of being "united against Hindus," while the ideology provided the rationale of being "united for Pakistan".
- The Two Nation Theory technically ended in 1947 with partition, whereas the Ideology still exists and defines the state of Pakistan today.

12. Partition of Bengal

1. Introduction

- The partition of Bengal is considered a clear illustration of the validity of Sir Syed Ahmad Khan's understanding of the Hindu mind.
- The act by the Curzon administration plunged the country into deep internal strife and open hostility between Hindus and Muslims.
- This event was significant as it forced Muslims out of their "political lethargy".

2. Causes of Partition

- i. Administrative Inconvenience: Bengal was a vast territory of 189,000 square miles with a population of 86 million, making it too unwieldy to be administered efficiently by a single lieutenant governor.
- ii. Limited Sources of Communication: It was difficult to establish an organized communication network throughout the province, and in East Bengal, existing systems were primitive and inadequate for modern requirements.
- iii. Linguistic Difference: There was a marked linguistic gap between the regions; the language in East Bengal was known as Muslamani, while Westerners considered their dialect superior.
- iv. High Rate of Crime: Due to the massive population and territory, the crime rate was very high, and the police were virtually unable to control anti-social elements.
- v. Lack of Educational Facilities: The British allocated minimal funds for education in East Bengal, leading to a state of shameful government apathy.
- vi. No Progress in Eastern Districts: Welfare funds were predominantly utilized in Western districts, leaving the East with no new projects or programs.
- vii. No Trade for East Bengal: Export trade in Assam was hampered by the Calcutta authorities' indifference, and while raw materials were produced in the East, factories were located in the West.

3. Partition Plan

- In 1905, the provinces of Bengal and Assam were reconstituted into two manageable provinces.
- The new province of East Bengal and Assam had a population of 31 million (including 18 million Muslims) with Decca as its capital.
- The remaining province of Bengal had a population of 54 million, with a Hindu majority of 42 million.

4. Muslim's Response

- i. Muslim Numerical Advantage: For the first time, Muslims held a clear numerical superiority (18 million out of 31 million) in their own province.
- ii. Widened the Muslim Prosperity: The partition offered a brighter economic future and a chance to escape a century of exploitation by Hindu capitalists who controlled the economy of United Bengal.

- iii. Free from Hindu Restraints: Muslims hoped their social status would be raised as they were freed from the constraints of Hindu-dominated society.
- iv. Political Uplift: The new administrative structure promised better job security and representation for Muslims in government institutions.
- v. Need of Muslim Organization (AIML): The intense Hindu agitation against the partition convinced Muslims of the need to organize politically, leading to the birth of the All India Muslim League (AIML) in December 1906.

5. Hindu Response

- i. Reaction from Hindu Capitalists: They opposed the move because it threatened their economic monopoly and their ability to continue exploiting the Muslim population.
- ii. Loss of the Practice of Hindu Lawyers: Lawyers feared that the creation of separate courts in the new province would hurt their legal practice.
- iii. Loss of Political Domination: Hindus perceived that the partition meant they would lose their political dominance over the entire province.
- iv. Reaction of Hindu Press: Since Hindus held a monopoly over the press, they feared new newspapers would be established in East Bengal to challenge their influence.

6. Annulment at Delhi Coronation Darbar

- On December 12, 1911, King George V announced the annulment of the partition during the Delhi Coronation Darbar.
- Professor Shariq-ur-Rehman remarked that this announcement was "the most settled of all the settled facts".

7. Results and Effects

- The Hindu reaction to the partition convinced Muslims that Hindus would never accept Muslim representation in the administration.
- Nawab Salim Ullah stated that the partition had briefly bestowed a "new life and new image" upon Muslims.
- The eventual annulment proved to Muslims that they could not rely on the Congress and would have to fight for their rights alone.
- The event vindicated Sir Syed Ahmad Khan's "Two Nation Theory" by showing that Hindus and Muslims were separate nations.

8. Conclusion

- The partition of Bengal exposed the true Hindu mentality regarding Muslim representation in the British system.
- While the partition was never a formal demand of the Muslims, the British decision provided significant benefits to the community and served as a catalyst for the Pakistan movement.

13. Simla Deputation (1906)

1. Introduction

- The Simla Deputation is regarded as a landmark in the history of modern Muslim India, marking the formal beginning of the Muslim political movement.
- It provided a major impetus to Muslim nationalism and, for the first time, lifted the Hindu-Muslim conflict to a constitutional plane.

2. Background / Factors

- i. Death of Sir Syed Ahmed Khan: After his death in 1898, a political vacuum was created. Muslims lacked a personality of his stature to safeguard their interests, leaving them with no option but to enter politics themselves.
- ii. Rise of Hindu Nationalism: Indian nationalistic politics began to assume anti-Muslim hues, evidenced by the use of cultural symbols (like the Shiva Jee cult and Gan Pati festivals) to evoke Hindu passion. The Indian National Congress (INC) was increasingly viewed as an exclusive Hindu party.
- iii. Results of 1892 Elections: These elections introduced the elective principle based on joint electorates. Consequently, no Muslim representative was elected, making Muslims suspicious of the transplantation of the Western "Westminster" representation model to India.
- iv. 2nd Phase of Urdu-Hindi Controversy: In April 1900, the Governor of U.P. declared Hindi as the second official language. This aroused deep Muslim concerns regarding their cultural and linguistic rights.
- v. Anti-Partition Movement: Following the Partition of Bengal, Hindus launched a vilification campaign against Muslims, which served as a primary factor in the formation of the deputation.
- vi. Coming of Liberal Party to Power in England (1905): The rise of the Liberal Party presaged sweeping democratic reforms. Muslims feared these reforms would be based on joint electorates, further marginalizing their community.
- vii. Morley's Budget Speech (July 20, 1906): John Morley's speech foreshadowed the introduction of representative institutions in India. This development "awakened Muslims from slumber" and galvanized them into action.

3. Formation of Simla Deputation

- Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk took the lead by writing to Mr. Archbold (Principal of Aligarh College) to arrange a meeting with Viceroy Lord Minto.
- A meeting of Muslim leaders was held in Lucknow on September 15–16, 1906, to prepare the formal address.
- The deputation consisted of 35 prominent Muslim members from all over India, headed by Sir Agha Khan.
- Other key members included Mohsin-ul-Mulk, Waqar-ul-Mulk, Nawab Salimullah Khan, and Sir Adamjee Pir Bhai.
- The group met the Viceroy at Simla on October 1, 1906.

4. Features / Demands of Simla Deputation

- The address was extremely moderate in tone and complimented British rule for bringing religious and personal liberty.
- It criticized the existing system of representation in municipalities and district boards for failing to address the specific needs of the Muslim community.

5. Demands

The deputation presented a charter of demands, including:

- The right to vote under separate electoral systems.
- Representation in the Imperial Legislative Council in excess of their population (weightage).
- A preference for the elective system over the nomination system wherever possible.
- A specific proportion of jobs for Muslims in both gazetted and non-gazetted cadres.
- Appointment of Muslims as judges of the High Courts and Chief Courts.
- Reserved seats on the senates and syndicates of various universities.
- Financial assistance for the establishment of a Muslim University.
- Representation in the Executive Council of the Governor General.

6. Reactions

- Viceroy's Response: Lord Minto's response was extremely sympathetic; he agreed that a purely territorial electoral scheme would be a "mischievous failure" in India and assured Muslims their rights would be preserved.
- Hindu Reaction: Hindu politicians and the press (such as Amrit Bazar Patrika) viewed the deputation with contempt, describing it as a "command performance" engineered by British officials to "divide and rule".
- Muslim Reaction: The community overwhelmingly welcomed the deputation; Syed Ameer Ali described it as the most important declaration since 1882.

7. Significance

- It was the first formal demand for separate electorates based on the Two-Nation Theory.
- The demands are considered the "Magna Carta" of the Pakistan Movement.
- It successfully compelled the British (Lord Minto) to accept the principle of separate electorates.
- It made the survival of Muslims as a distinct entity in India possible and provided a turning point that eventually led to the 1947 Partition.

8. Conclusion

- The Simla Deputation represented the early stirring of a national consciousness among Muslims.
- While critics labeled it a "command performance," the sources note it gave Muslims a critical opportunity to voice long-standing grievances regarding their lack of real representation.
- It forestalled immediate conflict and provided the foundation for the establishment of the All India Muslim League just a few months later.

14. All India Muslim League (December 1906)

1. Introduction

- The establishment of the Muslim League is considered a milestone in the history of Muslim politics in India.
- It marked the real beginning of a true Muslim political struggle in the 20th century.
- The League played a vital role in spearheading the movement toward its final destination: the creation of Pakistan.
- It served as a central platform for rallying Muslims under a single political banner.

2. Factors Leading to the Establishment of AIML

- i. Death of Sir Syed Ahmed Khan: During his lifetime, Sir Syed advised Muslims to avoid politics; however, his death in 1898 created a political vacuum, leaving Muslims with no choice but to enter politics to safeguard their interests.
- ii. Rise of Hindu Nationalism: The rise of leaders like B.G. Tilak and Lala Lajpat Rai, who used anti-Muslim cultural symbols and slogans (e.g., against cow slaughter), forced Muslims to organize politically.
- iii. Elections of 1892: The introduction of elective principles resulted in no Muslim representatives being elected, making the community suspicious of the Westminster model of joint electorates.
- iv. Resurgence of Urdu-Hindi Controversy: Measures taken in 1900 by Anthony MacDonnell to declare Hindi as an official language in U.P. made Muslims realize their interests could not be protected without a separate party.
- v. Anti-Muslim Agitation against Partition of Bengal: A vilification campaign launched by Hindus against the partition convinced Muslims of the need for a counter-organization.

- vi. Role of Muslim Press: Journals like the Aligarh Institute Gazette, Comrade, and Zamindar sowed the seeds of political awareness and a demand for a dedicated party.
- vii. Coming of Liberal Party to Power (1905): The rise of the Liberal Party in England and the appointments of Lord Minto and John Morley raised expectations for democratic reforms.
- viii. Morley's Budget Speech (20th July, 1906): This speech foreshadowed the introduction of representative institutions, compelling Muslims to organize to demand their rights.
- ix. Simla Deputation: Although the Viceroy gave a sympathetic hearing to the deputation, there was no guarantee his successors would do the same, making a permanent political organization essential to maintain pressure.
- x. Miscellaneous Factors: Scholar K.K. Aziz identifies four crucial factors: the belief in Muslims as a separate entity, the Hindu character of the Congress, the desire for separate electorates, and growing political awakening through education.

3. Establishment of AIML

- Following the Simla Deputation, leaders like Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk and Nawab Salimullah Khan moved to form a party.
- The League was formally established on December 30, 1906, at the conclusion of the All India Muhammadan Educational Conference in Dhaka.
- Nawab Waqar-ul-Mulk presided over the session, and the resolution for establishment was moved by Nawab Salimullah Khan and seconded by Hakim Ajmal Khan.

4. Objectives of AIML

- To foster a sense of loyalty toward the British government among Muslims.
- To look after and protect the political interests and rights of the Muslims.
- To promote better understanding and prevent hostility between Muslims and other Indian communities.

5. Organization and Structure

- Initial membership was limited to 400 members.
- A central committee (later known as the Council of AIML) was established with an executive body consisting of a president, six vice-presidents, a secretary, and two joint secretaries.
- Sir Agha Khan served as the first permanent president (1908–1912).
- Provincial branches were established across India, including in Pune, Madras, Bombay, East Bengal, and Punjab.

6. Change of Creed

- In March 1913, on the proposal of Jinnah, the Muslim League added a fourth objective to its creed: "To attain suitable self-government for India under the aegis of the British".

7. Factors Responsible for Change in Creed of AIML

- i. Disillusionment with British: Muslims grew increasingly suspicious of British intentions due to perceived anti-Muslim policies.
- ii. Anti-Muslim Policies of British: Events like the Kanpur Mosque tragedy and the government's delay in elevating Aligarh College to university status created a rift.
- iii. Annulment of Partition of Bengal (12th December, 1911): The British decision to undo the partition dashed Muslim hopes for self-determination and was seen as a betrayal.
- iv. Invasion of Turkey by Balkan States (1911–1912): Britain's open support for anti-Turkish forces during the Balkan Wars infuriated Indian Muslims, who felt a deep bond with the Ottoman Caliphate.

- v. Radical Change inside AIML: A new cadre of younger, more nationalist leaders emerged; the headquarters were moved to Lucknow, and membership fees were reduced to make the party more accessible to the masses.
- vi. Role of Jinnah: Although not yet a formal member at the start of this transition, Jinnah's insistence on highlighting political objectives and his eventual joining of the League in 1913 were instrumental in aligning League policy with that of the National Congress.

15. Minto-Morley Reforms (1909)

1. Introduction

- The Minto-Morley Reforms of 1909 occupy a significantly important position in the constitutional history of the subcontinent.
- The British introduced these reforms as a way to lessen the severity of Indian reaction, particularly from Hindus, following the Partition of Bengal.
- These reforms represented another step by the British Government toward the establishment of a representative government in India.

2. Factors

- a. Process of Constitutional Reforms: The process began with the Indian Councils Acts of 1861 and 1892; however, since these previous acts failed to produce fruitful results for Indians, the British introduced the 1909 reforms to meet their demands.
- b. Political Awakening: Feelings were provoked by the failure of earlier reforms, the Partition of Bengal, the formation of the Muslim League, and the Universities Act, leading Indians to believe the British should grant them citizenship rights.
- c. Voice of National Congress: The Indian National Congress criticized existing reform packages and raised its voice for greater democratization and increased Indian representation in institutions.
- d. Establishment of Representative Government: The British government attempted to redress grievances by making an effort to establish a more representative government structure in the subcontinent.
- e. Reaction against the Partition of Bengal: Some historians claim that the Minto-Morley reforms were specifically introduced to bring an end to the widespread agitation against the partition of Bengal.
- f. Formation of All India-Muslim League: The establishment of the League spread consciousness among Muslims, making them increasingly aware of the need to protect and preserve their rights.
- g. Lord Minto's efforts for Indian support: Upon becoming Governor General in 1905, Lord Minto sought to win the support of Muslims, Hindus, and moderates to counter the forceful agitation then occurring in the country.

3. Features

- i. Enhancement of Indians in Governor General's Executive Council (GGEC): The British government increased the number of members in the council to sixty (60), which was a step toward creating an assembly within an assembly.
- ii. Right of Separate Electorate: Under these reforms, the British government officially granted Muslims the right of separate electorates.
- iii. To broaden the powers of the Imperial Legislative Council: The council's powers were broadened to include authority over the budget and resolutions regarding tax rules and regulations.
- iv. Right to ask supplementary Questions: Members were given the right to ask supplementary questions, though departmental in-charges were free to choose whether to answer immediately.

- v. Right to move Resolution: Members of the Imperial Legislative Council gained the right to move resolutions, though the Council President retained the power to disallow debate over any portion of a resolution.
- vi. Enhancement of members in the provincial council: The number of additional members in the provincial councils was also enhanced.
- vii. Inclusion of SP Sinha in Viceroy Executive Council: The reforms made S.P. Sinha the first Indian member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, a step that was strongly criticized within the British administration.

4. Significance

- Moderate Welcome: The reforms were welcomed in moderate Indian circles; for instance, Gokhale stated in the council that Lord Minto and Lord Morley had saved the country from "anarchy and chaos".
- Congress Dissatisfaction: Hard-liners within the Congress were not satisfied, believing the reforms fell short of the promises made in the John Morley Dispatch of 1908.
- Muslim League Support: The All India Muslim League welcomed the reforms and passed a resolution in its 1910 Delhi session offering cooperation for the scheme's success.
- Political Constraints: The reforms disqualified "rebellious" elements from contesting elections and introduced an indirect system of voting with a very limited franchise.
- Consultative Nature: Despite the changes, the councils remained merely consultative in nature, as they only had the power to criticize or ask about government policies without real executive control.

5. Conclusion

- Despite various criticisms and drawbacks, the Minto-Morley Reforms paved the way for a decided step forward in the constitutional evolution of the Indian subcontinent.
- They occupy a great significant position for lessening the severity of the Hindu revolts that had followed the partition of Bengal.

16. Lucknow Pact (1916)

1. Introduction

- The Lucknow Pact is regarded as a milestone in the political and constitutional history of India and represents the high watermark of Hindu-Muslim unity.
- It was the first and last pact concluded between the Indian National Congress and the All-India Muslim League on the contentious issue of separate electorates.

2. Factors / Background

The pact was an expression of growing sentiments of cooperation that had been developing since 1912.

- i. Change in Muslim Politics: In the second decade of the 20th century, Muslims became disillusioned with the British due to the annulment of the Partition of Bengal, the Kanpur Mosque tragedy, and the British role in the Balkan wars.
- ii. Emergence of New Educated Leadership: A progressive group led by Waqar-ul-Mulk emerged, raising anti-imperialist slogans and making the League more accessible by reducing membership fees and age limits.
- iii. Rise of New Brand of Journalism: Journalists like Maulana Mohammad Ali Johar, Abul Kalam Azad, and Zafar Ali Khan used their respective papers (Comrade, Al-Hilal, Zamindar) to criticize the government and fuel nationalistic sentiments.

- iv. Efforts for Hindu-Muslim Unity: Leaders like Hakim Ajmal Khan began advocating for unity as early as 1910, leading to initiatives like the Calcutta Unity Conference.
- v. Role of Muslim League London Branch: In 1912, the branch proposed representative boards to resolve communal issues, including suggestions for Muslims to stop cow slaughter and Hindus to stop interfering with prayers.
- vi. Change in Muslim League Creed: In March 1913, the League added the attainment of self-government under the British aegis to its constitution, aligning its goals with those of the Congress.
- vii. Role of Liberal Leadership: Both parties were dominated by liberal elements such as Gokhale, S.P. Sinha, and Mazhar-ul-Haq, who were eager to take initiatives for unity.
- viii. Jinnah's Efforts: Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah, being a member of both parties, served as a bridge between the League and the Congress and cemented their cooperation.
- ix. Outbreak of the First World War: The 1914 war increased the realization that joint demands were necessary while the British were in desperate need of Indian support.
- x. Scheme of 19: In September 1916, 19 members of the Imperial Legislative Council (including Jinnah) presented a joint draft for further constitutional reforms.

3. Lucknow Pact - Other Developments Leading to the Pact

- In December 1915, for the first time, both parties held their annual sessions at the same place (Bombay) and established committees to prepare a joint constitutional scheme.
- These committees met in Calcutta in November 1916 to finalize the scheme, which was then formally passed during the annual sessions in Lucknow in December 1916.

4. Features of Lucknow Pact

- Separate Electorates: The Hindus formally agreed to the right of separate electorates for Muslims.
- Legislative Representation: It was conceded that Muslims would have one-third representation in the Imperial Legislative Council.
- Weightage Formula: Muslims were given more representation than their population in provinces where they were in the minority, but less representation in provinces where they were in the majority (Punjab and Bengal).
- Veto Power: No bill affecting another community could be presented or passed in any elected body if three-fourths of the members of that community opposed it.
- Expanded Councils: The Imperial Legislative Council was to be increased to 150 members (4/5ths directly elected), and provincial councils were also to be enlarged.
- Provincial Autonomy: The pact demanded the curtailment of the Secretary of State's control to provide greater autonomy to provincial governments.
- Supplementary Questions: All members of the councils were to be given the right to ask supplementary questions.

5. Significance / Impact

- "The Only Bright Spot": Historians describe the pact as the only bright spot in the otherwise dismal history of Hindu-Muslim relations.
- Acceptance of Nationhood: For the first time, the Congress officially accepted the separate entity of Muslims as a nation.
- Joint Struggle: It created a conducive environment for launching joint anti-imperialist movements, such as the Non-Cooperation Movement and agitations against the Rowlatt Act.
- Constitutional Influence: Its principles were generally followed in the subsequent Montague-Chelmsford Reforms.

6. Criticism

- Majority Sacrifice: In Punjab and Bengal, Muslims surrendered a significant portion of their seats (e.g., 1/10th in Punjab), resulting in them becoming a minority in their own majority provinces.
- Lack of Responsibility: The pact provided for elected majorities but failed to provide for ministries that were truly responsible to the legislatures.
- Personalities' Displeasure: Allama Iqbal later expressed displeasure, arguing it only worked if the goal was a single nation; Chaudhary Khaliq-uz-Zaman viewed it as a product of political inexperience that sowed seeds for the eventual partition of Punjab and Bengal.

7. Conclusion - End Note

- The cooperation eventually failed as the spirit behind the pact dried out.
- In 1940, Jinnah noted that while the unity ended, the pact remained significant for being signed on the fundamental principle of two separate entities.

17. Montague Chelmsford Reforms (1919)

1. Introduction

- The Montague-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919 occupy a position of great significance in the constitutional history of the subcontinent.
- These reforms represented a British attempt to fulfill the growing Indian demand for self-government.

2. Factors

- i. Indian Rejection of Self-rule: While the British initially rejected demands for self-rule, various political developments brought a new level of awareness and consciousness to the Indian people.
- ii. Franchise Problem for Women: The Minto-Morley Reforms of 1909 provided an extremely limited franchise and voting rights to Indian women. This was viewed as an unfair and undemocratic attitude by the British government, necessitating a new reform package to grant women more democratic rights.
- iii. Racial Discrimination: During the First World War, Indians pointed out the hypocrisy of Britain claiming to be a "champion of freedom" and fighting for the survival of democracy globally while being hesitant to allow democracy to flourish in India.
- iv. Episode of First World War: The movement for self-government gathered significant momentum in India in the wake of the war, making the demand for self-rule more vigorous.
- v. Indirect Method of Election: The 1909 reforms had utilized an indirect method of elections, which gave the British space to intervene and choose Indian representatives according to their own will.
- vi. August Declaration: On August 20, 1917, the British Secretary of State for India, Edwin Montague, announced a policy of "increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration" and the gradual development of self-governing institutions.

3. Features

- i. Enhancement for Indians in Governor General's Executive Council (GGEC): The number of Indian members in the GGEC was increased to three.
- ii. Formation of Bicameral Legislature: A bicameral central legislature was established, consisting of the Indian Legislative Assembly (Lower House with 145 members and a 3-year term) and the Council of State (Upper House with 60 members and a 5-year term).

- iii. Division of Legislative Work: Work was divided into Central subjects (defence, foreign affairs, customs, relations with Indian States, telephone, currency, and railway) and Provincial subjects (local self-government, public health, education, irrigation, and agriculture).
- iv. Enhancement in the Powers of Assembly: The number of members was increased, and they were granted the right to move resolutions in the Assembly.
- v. Separate Electorate for the Muslims: The British government maintained the right of separate electorates for Muslims, as previously conceded in 1909.
- vi. Salary of the Secretary of the State: According to these reforms, the Secretary of State would henceforth receive his salary from the British exchequer rather than the Indian exchequer.
- vii. Setting of a Commission After Ten Years: It was decided that a commission would be formed after a decade to assess the success or failure of the reforms and propose further improvements.

4. Significance

- The reforms introduced the Dyarchy system, but it ultimately failed due to hostile conditions such as the Jallianwala Bagh massacre and the Khilafat Movement.
- The British gave enormous powers to the governors, which many felt destroyed the true essence of the parliamentary form of government.
- Despite these flaws, scholars note that these reforms brought major changes and marked the beginning of responsible government in eight provinces.

5. Conclusion

- The Montague-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919 were a pivotal British attempt to address Indian demands for self-rule.
- While hampered by internal contradictions and external political unrest, they represented a decided step forward in the constitutional evolution of British India.

18. Khilafat Movement

1. Introduction

- The Khilafat Movement assumes great importance as it represents the first quarter of the 20th century's political awakening.
- It marked the real beginning of popular politics for Muslims in the subcontinent.
- It was significant as the first and last movement launched jointly by Hindus and Muslims following the 1857 War of Independence.
- The failure of the movement had deep and lasting repercussions on Hindu-Muslim relations.

2. Background - Factors

The movement was necessitated by several factors:

- Indian Muslims provided medical support to Turks during the War of Tripoli (1911).
- The start of First World War and Turkey's decision to side with the Central Powers against Britain.
- The Massacre of Jallianwala Bagh (1919), which fueled anti-British sentiment across India.

3. Objectives

The movement had three primary goals:

- To maintain the institution of the Khilafat (the Caliphate).
- To preserve the sanctity of the Holy Places of Islam.
- To protect the geographical and territorial integrity and sovereignty of Turkey.

4. Aspects of Khilafat Movement

- a. Establishment of Organizations:
 - Majlis-i-Khuddam-i-Kaaba was established on December 3, 1919.
 - The All India Khilafat Committee was formed on July 5, 1919, following a large meeting in Bombay.
- b. Khilafat Day/Conference: An All India Khilafat Conference was held on November 23–24, 1919, presided over by Moulvi A.K. Fazl-ul-Haq, who emphasized seeking cooperation from non-Muslims.
- c. Non-Cooperation Movement:
 - The Jamiat-ul-Ulema-i-Hind issued a fatwa of Tark-e-Mawalaat on September 6, 1920.
 - This included boycotting courts, government-aided schools, and councils, as well as renouncing titles and resigning from government posts.
 - The Hijrat Movement also emerged, with a fatwa declaring India Dar-ul-Harb, leading 30,000 Muslims to migrate to Afghanistan.
- d. Khilafat Delegation: In 1919, a delegation led by Moulana Mohammad Ali Johar and including Sayyid Suleman Nadvi met British Prime Minister Lloyd George. They demanded that the Sultan remain sovereign over Turkey and that Holy Places remain under Muslim rule, but the mission proved useless.
- e. Khilafat Committee Bombay: On March 20, 1919, approximately 15,000 Muslims assembled in Bombay to form the local Khilafat Committee under Seth Jan Mohammad Chottani.

5. Causes of Failure of Khilafat Movement

- Lack of Ground Realities: Scholars like I.H. Qureshi view it as an "emotional frenzy" or "adventure in altruism" that lacked a practical basis.
- Incompatible Slogans: The goal of Khilafat (international/religious) was not entirely compatible with the goal of Non-Cooperation (national/political).
- Hijrat Movement Disaster: The migration to Afghanistan proved a massive failure, leaving thousands of Muslims destitute.
- Gandhi's Withdrawal: M.K. Gandhi withdrew support after the Chora Chori incident, dealing a colossal blow to the movement.
- Abolition by Turks: The final blow came when Mustafa Kemal Pasha himself abolished the Caliphate and declared Turkey a Republic in 1924.
- Leadership Absence: Sane political elements like Jinnah were absent from the movement.

6. Impacts of Khilafat Movement

Positive Side:

- i. Beginning of Popular Politics: It moved politics from "drawing rooms" to the masses.
- ii. Joint Hindu-Muslim Unity: It represented the high watermark of cooperation between the two communities.
- iii. Anti-British Consciousness: It ended the era of "loyalty and constitutionalism," fostering active hostility toward British rule.
- iv. Boost to Muslim Nationalism: The Pan-Islamic cause strengthened the spirit of nationalism among Indian Muslims.

- v. Emboldened Muslims: It gave Muslims the courage to challenge British power directly.
- vi. Political Training: It provided crucial experience in agitational and street politics.
- vii. Mobilizing Impact: It successfully mobilized all sections of society, including women, youth, and the elderly.
- viii. Muslim Journalism: The circulation of papers like Comrade and Zamindar increased significantly.
- ix. Support Convergence: It uniquely brought together both orthodox and moderate elements under one cause.
- x. Ulema and Students in Politics: It marked the entry of religious scholars and students into the political arena.
- xi. Impact on Pakistan Movement: It exposed the "Hindu psyche" and trained a new cadre of leadership for the future struggle for a separate state.

Negative Side:

- i. Adventure in Altruism: The movement is criticized for pursuing unachievable international goals at the cost of local interests.
- ii. Hijrat Movement Consequences: Thousands perished or lost their properties in the ill-fated migration to Afghanistan.
- iii. Opportunity for Gandhi: It provided Gandhi a platform to become a top national leader before he withdrew support on "flimsy" grounds.
- iv. Communal Antagonism: The collapse of the movement was followed by an era of severe communal riots.
- v. Involvement of Ulema/Students: Their entry into politics created a lasting impact on post-partition Pakistani politics.
- vi. Islamization of Politics: Issues began to be assessed on religious rather than secular criteria.
- vii. Dormant Muslim League: The League remained a "dormant party" as its popularity was overshadowed by the Khilafat Committee.
- viii. Collapse of Unity: The withdrawal of support by Gandhi shattered the dream of Hindu-Muslim unity "once and for all".

7. Conclusion

- The Khilafat Movement was a turning point that transformed Muslim politics into a mass movement.
- While it failed to save the Caliphate, it served as a catalyst for Muslim self-assertion and provided the political training necessary for the later success of the Pakistan Movement.

19. From Delhi Proposals to Nehru Report

1. Delhi Proposals

- In the Delhi Proposals, Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah admitted to foregoing the Muslims' right of separate electorates in an effort to present a strong, united opposition to the British government.
- Muslims proposed that both the Hindu and Muslim communities collaborate their efforts to establish their own government in the subcontinent.
- However, these proposals were essentially rejected in favor of the points later established in the Nehru Report, which increased Jinnah's disillusionment with joint political efforts.

2. Simon Commission

- The Montague-Chelmsford Reforms (1919) had stipulated that a commission be formed after ten years to evaluate Indian constitutional progress.

- Due to the political situation, the British government announced the appointment of this Statutory Commission (the Simon Commission) on November 26, 1927, earlier than originally planned.
- The commission, chaired by Sir John Simon, consisted entirely of British members and included no Indians.
- Because of the lack of Indian representation, the Congress and the Jinnah-led group of the Muslim League boycotted the commission, while a group led by Mian Muhammad Shafi chose to meet with it.
- The commission was met with widespread hostility and slogans of "Simon go back," and its final detailed report was ultimately rejected by both the Congress and the Muslim League.

3. Nehru Report (1928)

In response to a challenge from Lord Birkenhead (Secretary of State for India) to the Indians to produce their own constitution, a committee was formed under the presidency of Motilal Nehru. The report included several key proposals:

- i. Complete Emancipation for India: The report advanced the idea of complete emancipation for India, under which Indians would exercise self-rule.
- ii. Strong Central Government: It proposed a unitary form of government, making the central government more powerful than the provinces. This outrightly rejected the Muslim demand for provincial autonomy.
- iii. Rejection of Muslim Representation Demand: The committee rejected the Muslim demand for one-third seats in the central legislature, arguing that Muslims made up less than one-fourth of the total population. This was opposed by Shoaib Quraishi, a Muslim member of the committee.
- iv. No Separate Electorate for Muslims: The report scrapped the principle of separate electorates, which had been accepted in the Lucknow Pact, and demand joint electorates instead. It claimed that separate electorates merely "awakened communal sentiments".
- v. Introduction of Reforms in N.W.F.P. & Baluchistan: It demanded that a constitutional package and reforms be introduced in the North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan, placing them on the same footing as other provinces.
- vi. Separation of Sindh from Bombay: The report recommended that Sindh be separated from Bombay, but attached a condition that it must be a financially responsible and autonomous region.

20. Jinnah's Fourteen Points

1. Introduction

- Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah initially had a strong desire for Hindu-Muslim unity, but his thinking began to change when Hindus refused to accept basic Muslim demands.
- The Nehru Report (1928) exposed a Hindu mentality and led Jinnah to believe that the Congress had become a purely Hindu body.
- In response, Jinnah put forward his famous constitutional program, which served to ensure Muslim rights and protect the interests of minorities in their respective provinces.

2. Main Features

- i. Form of Constitution: The future constitution should be federal, with residuary powers vested in the provinces; the Central Government should only control matters of common interest guaranteed by the constitution.
- ii. Provincial Autonomy: A uniform measure of autonomy must be guaranteed to all provinces.
- iii. Representation of the Minorities: All minorities should be given adequate and effective representation in all assemblies and elected bodies without reducing a majority community in any province to a minority or equality.

- iv. 1/3rd Muslim Seats in Central Legislature: Muslims should have at least one-third of the seats reserved for them in the central legislature.
- v. Separate Electorate: Representation of communal groups should continue through separate electorates, though any community could choose to abandon them in favor of joint electorates at any time.
- vi. No Territorial Redistribution for Muslims: Any necessary territorial changes should not affect the Muslim majority in the Punjab, Bengal, and the North-West Frontier Province.
- vii. Full Religious Liberty: Full liberty of belief, worship, observance, propaganda, association, and education should be guaranteed to all communities.
- viii. Method for Passing the Bill: No bill or resolution should be passed in any elected body if three-fourths of the members of a community affected by it oppose the measure.
- ix. Separation of Sindh from Bombay: Sindh should be separated from the Bombay Presidency and established as a separate province.
- x. Introduction of Reforms in N.W.F.P. and Baluchistan: Reforms should be introduced in these regions on the same footing as in other provinces.
- xi. Adequate Muslim Share in Jobs: The constitution should provide Muslims an adequate share in all state services and self-governing bodies, with due regard to efficiency.
- xii. Safeguards for the Muslim Culture: There should be adequate safeguards for the protection of Muslim religion, culture, personal law, and education, including their due share in state grants-in-aid.
- xiii. Formation of Cabinet: No central or provincial cabinet should be formed without a proportion of at least one-third Muslim ministers.
- xiv. States Approval for Amendment in the Constitution: No change or amendment to the constitution should be made by the Central Legislature without the concurrence of the States constituting the Indian federation.

3. Significance of Fourteen Points

- Minimum Charter of Muslim Demands: These points served as a minimum charter that Muslims wanted to see incorporated into any future constitution, regardless of who framed it.
- Constitutional Document: The points provided a formal document ensuring the protection of rights for both Muslims and other minorities.
- Unification of Muslim Forces: The program brought together various Muslim factions, temporarily unifying the Jinnah League and the Shafi League.
- Established Jinnah's Credentials: The Fourteen Points firmly established Jinnah as the undisputed representative leader of the Muslims and the Muslim League as their primary political body.
- Act of Statesmanship: Jinnah's program overshadowed rival groups, such as the All Parties Muslim Conference, that threatened the League's representative position.
- Focal Point of Politics in the 1930s: These points became the bedrock of Muslim politics; any subsequent meeting or proposal that negated them was generally rejected by the community.
- Great Constitutional Significance: Many of these points, such as the separation of Sindh and reforms in NWFP, were later considered by the British during the framing of the Government of India Act 1935.
- "Parting of the Ways": The failure of the Congress to accept these points is viewed by historians as a significant turning point that eventually made the partition of India inevitable.

21. Allahabad Address (1930)

1. Introduction

- The Allahabad Address was a monumental speech delivered by Allama Iqbal that served as a virtual blueprint for the creation of a separate state for Muslims in the Indian subcontinent.

- It occupied great significance in the evolution of partition proposals and provided a major boost to Muslim nationalism.

2. Historical Background

- In 1930, Allama Iqbal was invited to preside over the annual session of the All India Muslim League.
- On December 29, 1930, he delivered his address, which was noted for being an analytical and scientific study of the community's problems delivered in a unique philosophical style.
- His solutions guided the subsequent political thinking and activities of the Muslims.

3. Salient Features

- i. Survey of Political Situation:
 - Iqbal began with a highly philosophical survey of the political situation in India, diagnosing its ills and offering solutions.
 - He negated the Western concept of nationalism, which separates religion from the state, arguing that in Islam there is no bifurcation between spirit and matter.
- ii. Theoretically Expounded Muslim Polity:
 - He theoretically expounded the main principles of Muslim polity, stating that the destiny of Muslims is linked with Islam.
 - He argued that the 70 million Muslims in India were more homogeneous than any other group and should declare themselves a separate cultural entity.

4. Significance

- i. Successful Solution for Modern Nationalism: Iqbal attained the status of a visionary leader by successfully resolving the dichotomy between territorial nationalism and pan-Islamism.
- ii. Exposition of Two-Nation Theory: Through this address, he became a prominent exponent of the Two-Nation Theory, which became the hallmark of the independence movement.
- iii. Idea of Separate Homeland for the Muslims: He proposed the amalgamation of Punjab, N.W.F.P., Sindh, and Baluchistan into a single state, providing a geographical basis for Muslim aspirations.
- iv. Clarity of Iqbal: The address was significant for being the first time a clear-cut idea for a separate Muslim identity was formally emanated.
- v. Far-sightedness of Iqbal: His proposals were grounded in reality and demonstrated his extraordinary foresight regarding the future of the subcontinent.
- vi. Spirit of Pakistan: The address is recognized for containing the essential spirit and rationale for the later creation of Pakistan.
- vii. Feasible Solution for Hindu-Muslim Conflict: It offered a peaceful and feasible solution to the long-standing communal conflict, though Hindu leaders at the time did not pay heed to it.
- viii. Great Impact for Muslim Nationalism: The address united the community under a common cause and a specific vision for a separate state.

5. Critical Reaction

- Following a hostile reaction to his proposals, Iqbal clarified to Edward Johnson and Raghib Ahsan that his ideas were regarding a "federation within a federation".
- Initially, his personal views were not the official policies of the Muslim League.
- It is also noted that in this specific address, Iqbal did not mention Bengal in his proposed state for the Muslims.

6. Conclusion

- While Iqbal's views were initially criticized because the League was officially committed to Jinnah's Fourteen Points, his address was later seen as a manifestation of accuracy and foresight.
- Scholar Mukhtar Zaman noted that the address "definitely contains the spirit of Pakistan if not its name," and its influence penetrated the political consciousness of Muslims within a decade.

22. From 1st Round Table to Communal Award

1. First Round Table Conference

- In an effort to convince and confront the political parties of India, the British government convened the first session of the Round Table Conference in London on November 12, 1930.
- While the Congress party boycotted the session, all other Indian political parties participated.
- Prominent Muslim leaders in attendance included Mr. Jinnah, Mohammad Ali Jauhar, Maulvi Fazl-i-Haq, Sir Muhammad Shafi, Sir Shah Nawaz, Ch. Zafar Ullah, and Ghulam Hussain Hidayat Ullah.
- The most significant decisions made during the conference included:
 - Approval of a federal form of government.
 - Maintenance of separate electorates for Muslims.
 - Agreement for the cooperation of princely states in an All India Federation.
 - Establishment of Sindh as a separate administrative unit.
 - Formation of responsible governments at the provincial level.
- The session concluded on January 19, 1931.

2. Gandhi-Irwin Pact

- The failure of the Congress's Civil Disobedience Movement exposed its limitations, leading the Congress to realize that no constitutional framework would be workable without their approval.
- Talks were held between Lord Irwin and Mahatma Gandhi, resulting in a pact signed on March 5, 1931.
- Key terms of the agreement included:
 - The creation of a Federation.
 - The withdrawal of ordinances promulgated in connection with the Civil Disobedience Movement.
 - The withdrawal of pending prosecutions and the release of prisoners (except in cases of violence).
 - The remission of fines.
- In exchange, the Congress agreed to call off the Civil Disobedience Movement immediately and attend the upcoming Second Round Table Conference.

3. Second Round Table Conference

- The conference was held in London from September 7 to December 1, 1931.
- Important participants included Gandhi and Allama Iqbal; notably, Maulana Muhammad Ali Jauhar had passed away by the time the conference began.
- Gandhi adopted a stern and stubborn attitude, insisting that India was a single state and Indians a single nation, regardless of religious differences.
- Gandhi remained adamant about not granting specific rights to minorities, leading all minority groups to pass a joint resolution for their rights.
- The conference failed to produce results, but it significantly exposed the "uni-nationalism" mentality of Gandhi and Nehru to the Muslim community.

4. Third Round Table Conference

- This final session took place from November 17 to November 24, 1932.
- Crucially, neither Gandhi nor Jinnah participated in this conference.
- The session was unable to resolve the long-standing issues between Hindus and Muslims and is described in the sources as a "mere formality" and a "farce".
- It resulted in an unbridgeable gulf widening between the two major Indian communities.

5. Communal Award

- Following the failure of the Round Table Conferences to produce a consensus, the British government published its own scheme known as the Communal Award.
- The British accepted the demand for separate electorates for Muslims and other minorities.
- British Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald promised that the government would substitute this decision with any agreed-upon solution reached by Indian leaders themselves.
- The Award was unacceptable to Muslims because it failed to grant them an overall majority in their majority provinces:
 - In Punjab, Muslims were given 47.6% of seats despite being 56.5% of the population.
 - In Bengal, where Muslims were 56% of the population, they received only about 48% of the total seats.
- Ultimately, the Award failed to satisfy any of the three main communities.

23. The Government of India Act 1935

1. Introduction

- The Government of India Act 1935 holds great constitutional significance in the history of the subcontinent.
- It introduced a system that provided for provincial autonomy granted by the British.
- The Act aimed to ensure the protection and participation of all minorities in the electoral process of India.

2. Historical Background

- Indians had increasingly demanded a greater role in their government since the late 19th century.
- The Indian contribution to the British effort in World War I led to the Government of India Act 1919, which introduced "dyarchy".
- Dyarchy proved unsatisfactory because the "purse strings" (financial control) remained in the hands of British officials even in areas where Indians had nominal control.
- Following the failure of Indian representatives to agree on federal details, the British government drafted a "white paper" reviewed by a committee chaired by Lord Linlithgow.
- The Act was passed into law in August 1935, receiving a lukewarm response in India as it was seen as too radical by some in Britain and insufficient by Indians.

3. Features

- i. Formation of All-Indian Federation: Powers were divided into federal, provincial, and concurrent subjects. The Central Government retained control over defense, religious, financial, and tribal affairs, while other powers went to ministries. Dyarchy was abolished at the provincial level.
- ii. Nature of the Central Assembly: The Act provided for a bicameral legislature, consisting of the Indian Legislative Assembly (lower house) and the Council of State (upper house).
- iii. Powers of the Governor General: The Governor General was granted authoritative powers, including control over financial credibility, law and order, and the safeguarding of minority rights. He had the sole authority to appoint or sack the Council of Ministers, issue ordinances, and dissolve the Assembly. He also controlled eighty percent of the country's budget.

- iv. Nature of Federal Court: A Federal Court was established, consisting of a Chief Justice and six judges, to advise the Governor General on constitutional matters.
- v. Abolition of Indian Council: The Act abolished the Indian Council and gave the Secretary of State the power to appoint advisors instead.

4. Significance

- a. Indian Expectations Unfulfilled: The Act failed to fulfill Indian expectations because it did not transfer real power or representation to the Indian people.
- b. Enormous Powers to the Governors: Both the Governor General and provincial governors retained complete control over the legislatures in the matter of law-making, which many felt undermined responsible government.
- c. Discriminatory Attitude towards States: The Act allowed representatives from Indian princely states to be nominated by their rulers rather than being elected, which was viewed as an undemocratic practice.
- d. League Reaction: The Muslim League argued the Act would create further obstruction; Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah famously described it as "thoroughly rotten, fundamentally bad and totally unacceptable".
- e. Congress Dissatisfaction: The Congress rejected the Act for depriving Indians of economic and political rights, with Pandit Nehru calling it a "machine without engine".

5. Conclusion

- The 1935 Act was intended as a relief package following the unrest of the Khilafat Movement and the Civil Disobedience Movement.
- Despite its flaws and the rejection by major Indian parties, it served as the working constitution for Pakistan for nine years and for India for three years after independence.

24. Congress Ministries (1937-39)

1. Introduction

- The establishment of Congress Ministries was a unique episode in the modern political history of the subcontinent, representing the first time Indians were able to form their own government under British rule.
- The period proved to be a turning point in the history of Hindu-Muslim co-existence, as the rule was marked by discrimination and atrocities against the Muslim community.
- The actions of these ministries had a defining role in alienating Muslim India from the "yoke of Hindu India".

2. Atrocities of Congress Ministries

- i. Congress Conspiracies against All-India Muslim League (AIML):
 - Congress refused to form coalition governments with the League in the provinces.
 - In the United Provinces (UP), they set humiliating conditions for a coalition, demanding that the League's parliamentary party cease to exist and its members join Congress unconditionally.
 - Congress played a major role in toppling the Muslim-led government of Sir Saad Ullah in Assam.
- ii. Hindu Steps for the Erosion of Muslims Identity:
 - Congress introduced symbols like the Tri-colour flag (Taranga) and made Band-e-Matram the national anthem.

- The Wardha Educational Scheme made co-education and music compulsory, while the Vidhya Mandar Scheme forced Muslims to study Hindi or Marhati.
- These educational policies were designed to produce a generation of Muslims insensitive to their own cultural glory and religion.
- Muslim students were often persuaded to bow before the portrait of Gandhi.
- iii. Economic Exploitation: The ministries adopted discriminatory policies that closed the doors of employment opportunities for Muslims, resulting in systematic economic exploitation.
- iv. Religious Interference: Congress authorities prohibited cow slaughtering and introduced criminal laws against those who defied this rule, directly attacking Muslim religious practices.
- v. Eruption of Communal Violence: The period saw a massive spike in communal unrest; by August 1939, there had been 57 communal riots resulting in 1,100 casualties.

3. Muslim Reaction

- The Muslim League initially tried to find a rapprochement through constitutional means, passing a resolution in 1938 asking Congress to address Muslim grievances, but Congress paid no heed.
- In response, the League documented these atrocities by presenting the Pir Pur Report and the Shareef Report.
- The escalating hostility eventually forced the League to change its creed and intensify its demand for a separate state.

4. Resignation of Congress Ministries

- The Congress resigned in late 1939 on the pretext that the British had inducted India into Second World War without the consent of Indian representative institutions.
- The Muslim League observed December 22, 1939, as the "Day of Deliverance" to celebrate the end of Congress rule.

5. Impacts of Congress Ministries

- i. Deep Sense of Insecurity: The rule aroused a deep suspicion among Muslims that Hindus could never be their friends, shaping the future course toward secession.
- ii. Muslim Aloofness from Hindus: The dream of a "United India" was shattered, and Muslims became thoroughly alienated from the political policies of the Congress.
- iii. Exposition of Hindu Mentality: Muslims realized the rule was a "trailer" of what they would face under a permanent Hindu majority, which they believed would reduce them to a perpetual minority.
- iv. Great Impetus to Muslim Nationalism: The experience reinforced the belief in an exclusive identity, providing the final push toward the Two-Nation Theory and the Ideology of Pakistan.
- v. Transformation in the Outlook of Jinnah: Jinnah, who was initially willing to cooperate and form coalitions, underwent a paradigm shift to become a champion of the Pakistan cause and a "secessionist" leader.
- vi. Popularity of Pakistan Demand: During this period, the Sind Assembly passed a resolution in favor of Pakistan (1938), and Jinnah began commissioning formal reports on partition proposals.
- vii. Change in Mentality of Provincial Leaders: Leaders who had previously stayed independent, such as Moulvi Fazal Haq and Sir Sikandar Hayat, joined the League out of fear of Congress dominance.
- viii. Emergence of Jinnah as an Undisputed Leader: Jinnah's popularity grew tremendously; in 1938, he was bestowed with the title "Quaid-e-Azam" and adopted a typical Muslim dress (cap and shairwani) to symbolize his leadership of the Muslim nation.
- ix. Importance of Indian Muslims for the British: The resignation of Congress created a vacuum that Muslims filled; the British realized that there were three parties (Hindus, Muslims, and British) and began giving substantial weightage to Muslim demands in future offers.

6. Conclusion

- The atrocities committed during the Congress Ministries convinced Muslims that they could not rely on the Congress to protect their interests.
- The period served as the economic and political rationale for the creation of a separate state, making the Lahore Resolution of 1940 inevitable.
- Ultimately, the experience proved Sir Syed Ahmad Khan's understanding correct: that Hindus and Muslims were indeed two separate nations.

Last Phase of Muslim Struggle for Pakistan

25. Lahore Resolution (1940)

1. Introduction

- The Lahore Resolution is regarded as a milestone in the Muslim political movement and the history of the subcontinent.
- It marked the formal beginning of the Pakistan movement; it is noted that never in history had a resolution of a mere 40 words so dramatically changed the destiny of a nation.
- The resolution was passed during the 27th annual session of the All-India Muslim League (AIML).

2. Background

- a. Hindu-Muslim Cleavages: By 1940, the cleavages between the two communities had reached a point where they defied any solution other than secession.
- b. Disillusionment of Muslims: Muslims had become thoroughly disillusioned with Hindu intentions, viewing the "Hindu Mentality" as one that sought to create "Ram Raj" and subjugate Muslims under tyrannical rule.
- c. Apprehensions of Muslim Salariat: As noted by scholar Hamza Alvi, the Muslim "salariat" class feared they could not compete with Hindus in education and social development, leading them to unite under the banner of the AIML.
- d. Popularity of Partition Proposals: While the idea of partition had been proposed since the 19th century, it gained massive impetus in the 1930s through figures like Abdul Haleem Sharar, the Kheri Brothers, and Ch. Rehmat Ali, who coined the term "Pakistan" in 1933.
- e. Atrocities of Congress Ministries: The "atrocities" committed during the Congress rule (1937–39) created a deep sense of insecurity among Muslims, providing a vital rationale for the demand for Pakistan.
- f. Desire for a Separate Muslim Homeland: Muslims felt the need to carve out a territory where they could practice their religion and culture freely and openly.
- g. Preservation of Cultural Identity: There was a strong desire to protect Muslim cultural identity, particularly as symbols like Urdu were perceived to be under threat.
- h. Outlook of Second World War: The resignation of Congress ministries during the war was viewed as a "colossal blunder" that Jinnah used as a pretext to demonstrate that Muslims were a separate, necessary party for the British to consult.
- i. Jinnah's Sagacity: Jinnah's keen sense of timing allowed him to realize that Muslims had been successfully alienated from Hindus and that the British needed Muslim support for the war effort.

3. Features

- The resolution demanded that geographically contiguous units be demarcated into regions that should be grouped to constitute "Independent States".
- It specified that the constituent units of these states must be autonomous and sovereign.
- It explicitly called for adequate, effective, and mandatory safeguards to be provided in the constitution for minorities for the protection of their religious, cultural, economic, political, and administrative rights.

4. Reaction

- Hindu leaders and the press launched an immediate and fierce tirade against the resolution, quickly labeling it the "Pakistan Resolution" despite the word not appearing in the actual text.
- Newspapers like the Daily Tribune called the scheme "unacceptable and horrible," while others suggested it was a "fanciful dream" that would be impossible to implement.

5. Significance / Impacts

- a. Establishment of an Independent State: It committed Muslim India to the final goal of establishing a separate, independent state.
- b. Beginning of Pakistan Movement: It transformed the Muslim League's goals into a mass movement, leading to overwhelming electoral success in 1946.
- c. End of Administrative Unity: It marked the beginning of the end of the administrative unity of the entire subcontinent.
- d. A Sense of Identity for Muslims: It provided Muslims with a clear sense of direction and assured them of both physical protection and political survival as a community.
- e. Peaceful Solution of Conflict: It was presented as the only feasible and peaceful solution to the long-standing Hindu-Muslim communal conflict.
- f. Protection of Minorities' Rights: The resolution formally pleaded for the protection of minority rights in the subcontinent.

6. Conclusion

- The Lahore Resolution is considered the "Magna Carta" of the Pakistan movement.
- Its impact was such that within less than a decade of its passing, it resulted in the creation of two independent states, fundamentally altering the map of the world.

26. Cripps Mission (1942)

1. Introduction

- The Cripps Mission holds a unique significance in the political and constitutional history of India.
- These proposals marked a wide departure from the previous British stance of maintaining strict control over Indian possessions.
- It symbolized a gradual shift towards the liquidation of British authority in the subcontinent.
- The mission is also considered significant for providing implicit recognition to the demand for Pakistan.

2. Background / Factors

Several critical factors necessitated the arrival of the Cripps Mission:

- i. British Need of Indian Support: The British government was desperate to break the political stalemate in India to secure full-fledged support for the war effort during World War II.
- ii. Japanese Intervention: By March 1942, Japanese forces had captured Rangoon and stood at the "gates of India," leading to fears that a discontented India might fall to Japan.
- iii. Muslim Appeasement: The British sought to appease Muslims, as they constituted a substantial proportion of the British fighting force.
- iv. International Pressure: President Roosevelt of the United States was reportedly putting pressure on the British government to secure India's cooperation.

3. Salient Features of Cripps Proposals

Sir Stafford Cripps arrived in Delhi on March 22, 1942, and presented a draft declaration with the following main points:

- Complete Independence: India would be granted complete independence at the end of the war.
- Constituent Assembly: A new constituent assembly would be formed after the war to frame a future constitution.
- Election of Members: Members of this assembly would be elected by the provincial assemblies through proportional representation.
- Right of Secession: The proposals vested the right of secession in the provinces, permitting non-acceding provinces to refuse the new constitution and frame a union of their own.
- Interim Government: Until the new constitution was framed, India would be governed by a composite cabinet (including Congress and League members) under the existing constitution, though Britain would retain responsibility for defense.

4. Congress Rejection

The Indian National Congress rejected the proposals for several reasons:

- They demanded an immediate de-facto and de-jure transfer of power and the setting up of a national government.
- They viewed the principle of non-accession for provinces as a "severe blow" to the conception of a united Indian Union.
- The party leadership held a divided opinion on the offer.

5. League's Rejection

The All-India Muslim League rejected the proposals because:

- The plan was not in line with the basic principles and desires of the League regarding a separate state.
- Muslims would only hold one-fourth (25%) of the seats in the proposed assembly, while all important issues were to be decided by a majority vote.
- Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah described the proposals as "taking the Muslims to gallows" and expressed grave apprehensions regarding the Pakistan scheme.

6. Congress Reaction

- Pandit Nehru described the offer as "belated and depressing".

- Mahatma Gandhi famously dismissed the proposals as a "postdated cheque on a crashing bank".

7. Significance

- Despite its failure, the mission was a definite advance over previous British offers.
- It represented the first time the British government formally agreed to the idea of complete Indian independence.
- The provision for provinces to secede gave legal weight to the possibility of creating a separate Muslim state (Pakistan).
- The British explicitly committed to protecting the rights of racial and religious minorities in a free India.

8. Conclusion

- The Cripps Mission failed to achieve an immediate settlement, but it fundamentally changed the nature of the constitutional debate.
- By acknowledging the possibility of partition and the inevitability of independence, it set the stage for the final phase of the Pakistan Movement and the eventual end of British rule in 1947.

27. Quit India Movement to Simla Conference

1. Quit India Movement

- Objective: The Congress launched this movement to put pressure on the British for immediate independence and to obstruct the Muslim League's claim for a separate state.
- League's Reaction: Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah described the movement as "black mailing" by the Congress.
- British Response: The British government took stern action, putting Mahatma Gandhi and other top Congress leaders behind bars.
- Outcome: The movement failed absolutely, producing no political results for the Congress.

2. Wavell Plan

- Introduction: In March 1943, Lord Wavell became the new Viceroy, focusing on the war effort while keeping the Cripps offer open.
- Proposed Reforms: He announced a plan to set up a new Executive Council where Muslims and Hindus would have equal representation.
- Composition: Under this plan, Muslims and Hindus were each allocated 5 seats out of a total of 14 ministries; the remaining seats were for minorities such as Sikhs, Parsis, and low-caste Hindus.

3. Gandhi-Jinnah Talks (1944)

- Context: These talks were held in Bombay from September 19 to September 24, 1944.
- Gandhi's Stance: Gandhi attempted to convince Jinnah to abandon the demand for a separate state, maintaining that Indians were a single nation.
- Jinnah's Stance: The Quaid refused to concede any of his claims regarding a separate homeland for Muslims, leading to the failure of the talks.
- Significance: Despite the failure, the talks were a tactical victory for Jinnah; it was the first time he was publicly recognized as the sole leader of the Muslims, meeting Gandhi (representing Hindus) at a summit level to resolve the political deadlock.

4. Simla Conference (1945)

- Convening: Following the end of the Second World War, Lord Wavell summoned a conference on June 24, 1945.
- The Deadlock: Jinnah demanded that all five members of the Executive Council allocated to Muslims must be nominated by the Muslim League.
- Viceroy's Stance: Lord Wavell remained adamant that at least one Muslim member should be a non-Leaguer.
- Failure: The conference failed because both the British and the Congress refused to recognize the Muslim League as the only representative organization of the Indian Muslims.

28. Cabinet Mission Plan (1946) & 3rd June Plan

1. Introduction

- The Cabinet Mission Plan was a landmark event that acted as a device of British imperialism to reconcile the irreconcilable differences between Indian political parties.
- It was essentially an attempt to maintain a united India and bury the concept of a separate Pakistan under the "debris of Indian nationalism".

2. Factors

- i. To Bridge the Political Deadlock: The international and socio-political situation was full of unrest, and strife between Hindus and Muslims was mounting, necessitating a solution.
- ii. League's Victory in Elections of 1945–46: The All-India Muslim League (AIML) gained a remarkable victory, proving to the British that the community's demand for a separate state could no longer be ignored.
- iii. Growing Rift between Congress and AIML: After the resignation of the Congress Ministries, the rift between the two parties grew daily as they pursued parallel and conflicting political agendas.
- iv. Mutiny in the Indian Navy: A mutiny in February 1946, though quickly suppressed, along with strikes in air force stations, signaled a dangerous disaffection within the military.

3. Appointment of Cabinet Members

- Following an announcement by Lord Attlee regarding the protection of minority rights, a mission was sent to India arriving on March 24, 1946.
- The members of the mission were Lord Pethick-Lawrence, Sir Stafford Cripps, and A.V. Alexander.

4. Main Features of Cabinet Plan

- Formation of Indian Union: A union would be formed dealing with defense, foreign affairs, and communications, with powers to raise necessary finances.
- Provincial Division: Provinces were divided into three groups: Group A (Hindu majority: Bombay, Madras, UP, CP, Orissa, Bihar), Group B (Muslim majority: Punjab, Sind, Baluchistan, NWFP), and Group C (Muslim majority: Bengal and Assam).
- Residuary Powers: Residuary powers were to be vested in the provinces.
- Reserved Seats: Seats in the Constituent Assembly were reserved for each province according to its population.
- Majority Decisions: Any major communal issue in the legislature would require a majority of representatives from each of the two major communities.
- Interim Government: An interim government would be set up where all portfolios would be handed over to Indian leaders.

5. Hindu Reaction

- The Congress expressed great delight, with Nehru's newspaper claiming that the Pakistan of Jinnah's conception had received a "state burial".
- The Hindu press (e.g., the Observer) welcomed the plan as it appeared to rule out the Muslim dream of a separate state.
- However, Gandhi later stated the plan was merely an "appeal" and "advice," and Nehru denounced the proposed provincial groupings.

6. Muslim Response

- The Muslim press, such as Nawa-i-Waqt, viewed the acceptance of the plan as a step toward the final destination of Pakistan.
- The Daily Tribune noted that Jinnah had effectively "acquired the spirit of Pakistan" through his tactical maneuvering.

7. Acceptance of Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah

- Jinnah decided to accept the plan because the Grouping of Provinces (Sections B and C) provided a "basis and foundation of Pakistan".
- He aimed to prevent the Congress from monopolizing the Interim Government.
- As a constitutionalist, he believed the plan was unworkable and out of touch with reality, and that accepting it would expose the Congress's lack of sincerity.

8. Conclusion

- When the Congress refused to join the interim government, the Mission backed out of its promise to allow the other party (the League) to form the government alone.
- This betrayal and the subsequent project failure led the League to launch "Direct Action" to force the issue.

9. Third June Plan

- On February 20, 1947, Lord Attlee announced that power would be transferred by June 1948.
- Lord Mountbatten replaced Wavell in March 1947 and prepared the 3rd June Plan, which was the culminating stage of the partition of the subcontinent.

10. Important Points of the Third June Plan

- i. Non-Muslim Majority Province: Provinces like CP, UP, Bombay, Madras, and Bihar were to be included in Bharat.
- ii. Partition of Punjab: The province was to be divided into two halves; Muslim majority areas to Pakistan and non-Muslim areas to Bharat, with a Boundary Commission to demarcate.
- iii. Partition of Bengal: Similar to Punjab, Bengal was partitioned into East Bengal (Muslim majority) and West Bengal (Hindu majority).
- iv. Holding of Referendum in N.W.F.P: The people of the North-West Frontier Province were given the choice to join either state via a referendum.
- v. Option for the States: Over 600 princely states were given the right to join either Pakistan or India based on their geographical position.
- vi. Option for Baluchistan: The Shahi Jirga and Municipal Committee of Quetta were tasked with deciding the future of Baluchistan.

- vii. Option for Sylhet: A referendum was to be held in the Sylhet district of Assam to decide between joining Pakistan or India.

29. Radcliff Award

1. Introduction

- The Radcliff Award occupies a unique position in Indian history as the culminating stage of the partition of India.
- It was a final extension of the 3rd June Plan, and its final recommendations were considered full of controversies, conspiracies, and territorial injustices.

2. Background

- Under the Indian Independence Bill, the Governor General was required to constitute a Boundary Commission.
- The Commission was instructed to demarcate the boundaries of the two parts of the Punjab and Bengal on the basis of ascertaining contiguous majority areas of Muslims and non-Muslims, while also taking into account "other factors".

3. Proposals for Making a Commission

- Various proposals for the demarcation were reviewed, including options to use the United Nations or the Law Lords of the Privy Council.
- After long discussion, Cyril Radcliff was appointed as the supreme Arbitrator to head the effort.

4. Formation of Two Commissions

Radcliff arrived on July 8, 1947, and met with Indian leaders to constitute two separate commissions:

- The Punjab Commission: Comprised of Justice Din Mohammad, Justice Muhammad Munir, Justice Mehr Chand, and Justice Sardar Teja Singh.
- The Bengal Commission: Consisted of Justice S.A. Rehman, Justice Abu Saleh Muhammad Ikram, Justice C.C. Yesvas, and Justice Bejan Kumar Mukerjee.

5. Announcement of Punjab Award

- The total area of Punjab was 99,089 square miles, with Muslims making up a majority of 16,217,242 out of the total 28,418,819 population.
- Despite their Muslim majorities, four districts—Jullunder, Ferozpur, Gurdaspur, and Ambala—were handed over to India.
- In Gurdaspur, three of the four tehsils (Batala, Gurdaspur, and Pathankot) were transferred to India, providing India with a safe passage to Kashmir via the Jammu Katwa road.
- Ferozpur, which housed an important Indian army arsenal and critical headworks on the Sutluj River, was awarded to India despite being the only way to irrigate West Punjab.

6. Announcement of Bengal Award

- Calcutta, the only major port and the region's biggest commercial and educational center, was handed over to India.
- Its development had been based on the labor of Muslim peasants, and its loss essentially turned East Bengal into a "rural slum".
- Other Muslim majority areas, such as Murshadabad, Nadiya, and parts of Jessore, were transferred to India.
- Even though the Sylhet district opted for Pakistan via referendum, parts of it were still given to India.
- In total, approximately 6,000 square miles and 3.5 million people belonging to majority Muslim areas were transferred to India under this award.

7. Criticism

- Injustice and Influence: The award was finalized by August 8 but was not announced until August 17, 1947, leading to claims that it was changed under the influence of Lord Mountbatten to favor India.
- Irrigation Disruptions: The map did not follow river courses, dividing the irrigation system and giving critical headworks to India while leaving the canals in Pakistan.
- "Perverse" Motives: Critics argue that Mountbatten deliberately undermined Muslim interests after Jinnah refused to allow him to become the Governor General of Pakistan.
- Strategic Bias: Some believe Calcutta and Ferozpur were pre-decided for India, with the award designed to ensure India remained strategically stronger in the region to protect British interests.

30. The Role of Ulema and Mashaikh in the Pakistan Movement

1. Introduction

- Before the creation of Pakistan, various schools of thought among the Ulema and Mashaikh of the subcontinent played an active and vital role in promoting the Pakistan Movement.
- Religious leaders from the Chishtia, Qadria, Naqshbandia, and Suharwardia orders, along with their followers, provided critical support for the Two-Nation Theory.
- British administrators, such as Sir Malcolm Darling, noted that the peasantry was deeply influenced by these religious figures, often considering them as essential guides in both spiritual and temporal matters.

2. Historical Background

- The movement's roots can be traced to Mujadid Alf Sani, whose introduction of the Two-Nation Theory laid the foundation stone for the struggle.
- This legacy was kept alive by Shah Wali Ullah and intensified in the 19th century by Shah Abdul Aziz.
- Syed Ahmad Shaheed and Shah Ismail Shaheed eventually converted this into an armed Jihad Movement to establish an Islamic state, famously fighting the Sikhs in the valley of Balakot.
- By the mid-20th century, Indian Muslims became increasingly convinced that they needed a separate state to avoid being outnumbered and dominated by the Hindu majority after the British departure.

3. Role in Reshmi Romal (Silk Letter) Movement

- After the 1857 War of Independence, Ulema established religious institutions to prepare younger generations to protect the faith.
- During World War I, Maulana Mahmood-ul-Hassan devised a revolutionary plan to oust British rulers from the subcontinent.
- This underground effort to seek international support for liberation became historically known as the "Silk Handkerchief Movement".

6. Role of Jamiat-ulema-i-Hind

- The Jamiat initially favored unconditional cooperation with the Hindus to drive out the British.
- However, a split occurred because many Ulema did not want to provide unconditional support to the Congress.
- While a pro-Congress faction was led by Maulana Hussain Ahmad Madni, an anti-Congress faction emerged that eventually supported the League.

7. Formation of Masha'ikh Committee

- In 1940, the Muslim League established a Masha'ikh Committee consisting of eminent religious leaders to gain support for a separate state.
- Key members included the Pir of Manki Sharif, Pir Jamat Ali Shah, and Makhdum Raza Shah of Multan.
- This committee helped align the religious influence of the pirs with the political goals of the League.

8. Formation of Jamiat-ul-Ulema Islam

- In October 1945, a large gathering of Ulema in Calcutta resulted in the formation of Jamiat-ul-Ulema Islam.
- This organization proved to be a landmark in the struggle, as it provided a dedicated platform for pro-League Ulema.
- The participation of these Ulema helped clarify the Islamic objectives of the Pakistan Movement for the masses.

- He exhorted Muslims to vote for the League, warning that opposing it was a betrayal of the nation's interests.

10. Defence for the Muslim Leaders of Muslim League

- Maulana Shabbir Ahmad Usmani defended Jinnah against charges that the League's leaders were not "devout" Muslims.
- He argued that it was more important for sincere Muslims to join the League and transform its character from within.

13. Contributions of Maulana Hussain Ahmed Madni

- According to the sources, Maulana Hussain Ahmed Madni was the leader of the pro-Congress faction of the Ulema.
- He launched a campaign against the Muslim League and favored a united India.
- The League had to deploy its own popular Ulema, such as Maulana Zafar Ahmed Usmani, to counter Madni's influence in regions like Sylhet.

14. Role of Pir Jamat Ali

- Pir Jamat Ali Shah, who had millions of followers, was a staunch supporter of the Aligarh Movement and the League.

- He was so committed that he declared he would not lead the funeral prayers of any devotee who failed to participate in the Pakistan Movement.

15. Holding of All India Sunni Conference

- The conference was held in Benaras in April 1946 and passed resolutions fully supporting the demand for Pakistan.
- The participants declared it their responsibility to establish a government based on Islamic jurisprudence.
- During this conference, Pir Jamat Ali Shah famously defended Jinnah, referring to him as a "Waliullah" (friend of God).

16. Role of Pir Sahib of Manki Sharif

- He joined the League in 1945 and mobilized thousands of followers to counter the influence of the "Khan Brothers" in N.W.F.P..
- He organized secret meetings of Mashaikh to emphasize that Pakistan was the only source of honor and freedom.

20. Role of Shaikh Abdul Majeed Sindhi

- A prominent figure from Sindh who embraced Islam at an early age and became a staunch advocate for Muslim welfare.

- Nearly all scholars of the Brelvi school, including Maulana Naeem-ud-Din and Maulana Abdul Hasnat, worked actively for Pakistan.
- The sources conclude that the Ulema and Mashaikh completely changed the atmosphere during the struggle, making the creation of Pakistan possible through their influence on the masses.

Third Part: Post-Independence Era

31. Early Problems of Pakistan

Introduction

- Since its inception, doubts were raised concerning Pakistan's economic and financial viability.
- When questioned by a journalist in 1943 about whether Muslims would be poorer in a separate state, Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah replied that Muslims were "tough people" and would not complain about being a "little tougher" for their own state.

Category A (Problems Linked with India)

1. Demarcation of Boundaries

- The Radcliff Award is described as a "shameful demarcation" and "unjust" to Muslims.
- Bengal: The only major port and industrial center, Calcutta, was handed to India despite being built on the labor of Muslim peasants, effectively turning East Bengal into a "rural slum".
- Punjab: Muslim-majority districts like Jullunder, Ferozpur, Gurdaspur, and Ambala were given to India.
- The transfer of Gurdaspur tehsils provided India with a safe passage to Kashmir via the Jammu Katwa road.
- The award gave India control of critical headworks on the Sutluj River in Ferozpur, which was the only way to irrigate West Punjab.

2. Division of Assets

- India was reluctant to pay Pakistan its rightful share of cash balances, which was 750 million rupees out of a total of four billion.
- The Indian government attempted to condition the release of funds on Pakistan surrendering the Kashmir valley.
- A partial payment of 200 million was eventually released following world pressure and intervention by Mahatma Gandhi.

3. Accession of Indian Princely States

- Kashmir: A Muslim-majority state where the Hindu ruler, Maharaja Hari Singh, wanted to align with India. This led to a conflict that remains a major irritant.
- Hyderabad: An immensely wealthy state with a Muslim ruler but a Hindu-majority population. India eventually seized it through a military operation.
- Junagarh: A maritime state with a Muslim ruler who acceded to Pakistan, but it was seized by India in November 1947.

4. Water Dispute

- The partition divided the natural flow of rivers in Punjab, giving critical headworks to India while the canals were in Pakistan.
- In 1948, India stopped the flow of water to Pakistan, threatening the country's agriculture with famine.
- The issue was eventually resolved through the Indus Water Treaty in 1960.

Category B (Indigenous Problems)

5. Administrative Problems

- The new state lacked basic administrative machinery; most Hindu staff migrated to India, leaving offices empty of furniture, records, and stationery.
- In the early days, many government officials were forced to work under the open sky with no shelter.

6. Rehabilitation of Refugees

- More than 12.5 million Muslims migrated to Pakistan, many arriving oppressed and depressed.
- Providing food, clothing, and shelter for this massive influx was a staggering responsibility that required the establishment of a dedicated Ministry of Refugees and Rehabilitation.

7. Choice of Capital

- Karachi was chosen as the capital, which caused frustration among East Pakistani politicians who believed it should be in Decca (Dhaka).
- This geographic imbalance contributed to long-term feelings of neglect in the eastern wing.

8. Constitutional Problems

- Pakistan faced a divide between those wanting a secular constitution and those demanding an Islamic one.
- The "reluctance of the power bloc at the center" to share power with the Bengali majority was a primary cause for the delay in framing the first constitution.

9. Linguistic Problem

- Although East Pakistan made up 54% of the population and demanded Bengali as a national language, Quaid-i-Azam declared Urdu as the only national language.
- This became a major source of early political friction between the two wings.

10. Pakhtunistan Movement

- A nationalist Pakhtun leader, Ghaffar Khan, raised the demand for a separate national identity within Pakistan, allegedly with support from India and Afghanistan.
- While a referendum in the NWFP favored Pakistan, the movement remained a challenge for early leadership.

11. Death of Quaid-i-Azam

- The sudden death of Jinnah on September 11, 1948, was a "massive setback" for the state.
- His passing declined the momentum for resolving administrative and constitutional issues, as no other leader possessed his undisputed authority and vision.

32. Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah as Governor General

Introduction

- Unlike his counterpart in India, Jinnah served as a Governor-General who was very much "in command," actively presiding over cabinet meetings and taking a direct executive role.
- He assumed office during a period of extreme scarcity where the government lacked basic necessities like furniture and stationery, often forcing officials to work under the open sky.

- His leadership was defined by an insistence on the highest standards of integrity, justice, and fair-play, reminding officials they were "servants of the people".
- He envisioned an Islamic democratic and progressive state that rejected theocracy in favor of a system focused on the welfare of the masses and the poor.
- His undisputed authority was seen as essential for resolving early state problems, making his sudden passing in 1948 a "massive setback" for the nation.

1. Rehabilitation of Refugees

- Jinnah shifted the capital to Lahore to personally supervise relief activities conducted by the government and voluntary associations.
- He established the "Quaid-i-Azam Relief Fund for Refugees" and invited philanthropists to donate, an appeal that deeply influenced the public.
- A dedicated Ministry of Refugees and Rehabilitation was formed in September 1947 to manage the crisis.
- The number of refugees eventually rose to nine million, representing one-fourth of the total population.
- Despite failing health, Jinnah and Liaquat Ali Khan paid frequent visits to Lahore, battling adverse circumstances with grim determination.

2. Consolidation of Economy

- At partition, the economy faced a severe crunch due to India's initial refusal to pay Pakistan's rightful share of cash balances.
- Jinnah actively involved the trade community, advising them to play their necessary role in the nation's progress.
- He established the State Bank of Pakistan on July 1, 1948, to ensure monetary stability and promote a national credit system.
- During the bank's inauguration, he exhorted the people to build the nation "as quickly and as well as you can".

3. Reforms in Administration

- Jinnah paid immediate attention to setting up administrative machinery despite the total lack of furniture, stationery, and official records.
- As Governor General, he held sole authority over civil and military matters, providing the dynamic leadership needed during the state's early days.
- He famously advised officials to maintain integrity, justice, and fair-play, emphasizing they were not rulers but servants.
- He strictly instructed officials to remain politically neutral and avoid being influenced by any political party or individual pressure.

4. Policy Against Provincialism

- In a public speech in Decca (March 21, 1948), Jinnah urged citizens to identify as one nation rather than as Punjabi, Sindi, Pathan, or Bengali.
- He explicitly warned the people to "give up this provincialism" for the sake of the country's survival.
- This stance was largely motivated by the language controversy that had begun to emerge in East Bengal shortly after independence.

5. Efforts for Unity

- Jinnah stated that the geographic distance between East and West Pakistan could be overcome by "faith"—faith in God, in themselves, and in their destiny.

- He appealed for national consolidation to counter "enemies of Pakistan" who he believed were attempting to create splits among Muslims.
- He viewed the creation of instruments for unity as a task of practical statesmanship that would need to be a continuing effort.

6. Conclusion

- Jinnah's sudden death on September 11, 1948, was a massive setback, as no other leader possessed his vision to resolve the state's early administrative problems.
- Throughout his brief tenure, he advocated for an Islamic democratic and progressive state focused on the welfare of the poor.
- His leadership was the foundation that allowed the newly born state to survive its initial existential crises.

33. Jinnah's Vision of Pakistan

1. Introduction

- Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah was firmly against any form of theocracy and sectarianism.
- He envisioned the creation of an Islamic democratic and progressive state.
- In his final Independence Day message, he stated that while the state's foundations had been laid, it was now up to the people to build it as quickly and well as possible.

2. Welfare of the Masses

- Jinnah believed that the state held the sole responsibility for the welfare of its citizens.
- He emphasized that to make Pakistan happy and prosperous, the government must concentrate wholly and solely on the well-being of the masses and the poor.

3. Religious Toleration

- In his historic August 11, 1947 speech, he declared that citizens were free to go to their temples and mosques, asserting that religion has "nothing to do with the business of the state".
- He maintained that all individuals, regardless of their creed, were equal citizens of one state.
- When a Shia delegation in Quetta claimed special rights based on their sect, he responded, "No, I am a Muslim," reinforcing his vision of a non-sectarian identity.

4. Democracy

- Jinnah urged that the foundations of Pakistani democracy be laid on truly Islamic ideals.
- He argued that Muslims did not need to borrow democratic concepts from the West because they had learned democracy about 1300 years ago from their own history.
- He pointed to the Uswa-i-Husna (the example of the Prophet PBUH) and the Prophet's pacts with minorities in Medina as the ideal model for the state to follow.

5. Law and Order

- Jinnah identified the maintenance of law and order as the first and most important duty of the government.
- He stated that the state must ensure that the life, property, and religious beliefs of all its subjects are fully protected.

6. Proper Role of Bureaucracy

- He famously advised government officials that they were "servants of the people" and not their rulers.
- He demanded that the bureaucracy uphold the highest standards of integrity, justice, and fair-play.
- He strictly instructed officials to remain politically neutral and avoid being influenced by any political party or individual pressure.

7. Guiding Principle of Constitution

- Jinnah explained that Islam and idealism had already taught the principles of democracy, equality, and justice.
- He believed the framers of the constitution were inheritors of these glorious traditions and would be fully alive to their responsibilities.

8. Rights of Minorities

- Jinnah is regarded as the greatest champion of minority rights in the modern world.
- He asserted that Islamic history and the Prophet (PBUH) provided clear proof that non-Muslims should be treated justly and fairly.
- He believed minorities were entitled to definite assurances regarding their status and rights in the new state.

9. Attitude Towards Provincialism

- Jinnah stated that the geographic distance between East and West Pakistan could be overcome through "faith"—faith in God, themselves, and their destiny.
- He explicitly warned citizens to "give up this provincialism" for the sake of the country's survival.
- He urged people to identify simply as one nation rather than as Punjabi, Sindi, Pathan, or Bengali.

10. Conclusion

- He viewed national consolidation as the only way to prevent enemies of the state from creating splits among Muslims.
- His leadership was dedicated to establishing a progressive Islamic state focused entirely on the welfare of its people.

34. Objective Resolution (1949)

1. Introduction

- Following the creation of Pakistan on August 14, 1947, there was an immediate need to establish it as an Islamic Republic.
- In March 1949, the first Constituent Assembly of Pakistan took its first major step by passing the Objective Resolution.
- This resolution was the first constitutional document to serve as the "foundation" for all subsequent constitutional developments in Pakistan.
- It was moved by Liaquat Ali Khan, the then Prime Minister of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, and officially approved on March 12, 1949.
- The resolution provided the sublime principles and parameters intended to make the constitution-making process acceptable to the people.

2. Features of Objective Resolution

- i. Sovereignty of Allah: It declared that sovereignty over the entire universe belongs to Allah Almighty alone. The authority delegated to the state of Pakistan through its people is a sacred trust to be exercised within the limits prescribed by Him.
- ii. Power of State: The state is to exercise its power and authority through the elected representatives of the people.
- iii. Making of Sovereign Constitution: The Constituent Assembly resolved to frame a sovereign constitution for the state of Pakistan.
- iv. Follow the Islamic Principles: The principles of democracy, freedom, equality, tolerance, and social justice as enunciated by Islam were to be fully observed.
- v. Teachings of Quran and Sunnah: Muslims were to be enabled to order their individual and collective lives in accordance with the teachings and requirements of Islam as set out in the Holy Quran and the Sunnah.
- vi. Rights of Minorities: Adequate provision was to be made for minorities to freely profess and practice their religions and develop their unique cultures.
- vii. Provincial Autonomy: Pakistan was designated as a federation where the constituent units would be autonomous within prescribed constitutional limits.
- viii. Protection of Fundamental Rights: The resolution guaranteed fundamental rights, including freedom of thought, expression, belief, worship, association, and the right to property.
- ix. Independence of Judiciary: It stipulated that the judiciary shall be independent and allowed to work without any outside pressure.

3. Importance of Objective Resolution

- i. Objective Resolution as Magna Carta: It occupies a unique position as the Magna Carta of Pakistan's constitutional history and served as the preamble for the 1956, 1962, and 1973 constitutions.
- ii. Shadow of Sovereignty of God: It gave an ideological color to the Western concept of democracy by placing sovereignty with God and treating political power as a sacred trust held by the people.
- iii. Assurance for Fundamental Rights: It provided a formal assurance that the state would manage affairs under an Islamic framework of democracy and social justice.
- iv. Protection of Minorities' Rights: The resolution offered definite assurances to minorities regarding the protection of their religious, cultural, and administrative rights.
- v. Autonomy of the Provinces: It formally recognized the need for provincial autonomy and territorial integrity within the federation.
- vi. Success of Islamists: The passing of the resolution was seen as a victory for Islamic elements, establishing Islam as the central point for national politics.
- vii. Framework for Better Life: It provided an essential outline for achieving specific societal goals and improving the lives of Pakistani citizens.
- viii. Importance in Judicial Interpretations: The resolution has been utilized by the Supreme Court of Pakistan in various judgments to safeguard the independence of the judiciary, such as in the Al-Jehad case.

4. Criticism from Liberal School of Thought

- Mixing Religion and Politics: Critics argued that the resolution combined religion with politics in a way that contradicted the spirit of modern Western democracy.
- Sovereignty Concerns: There were objections regarding the "Sovereignty of Allah" concept, with critics voicing concerns over whether it would allow for truly equal rights for minorities.
- Desire for a Secular/Moderate State: Many moderate and modernist members of the Muslim League did not support an orthodox theocratic state and preferred a "mid-way" between Islamic law and Western democratic values.

- Fear of Extremism: Opponents feared the resolution would allow religious extremists to exploit the constitution to establish a theocratic state.
- Adequacy of Shariah: Some argued that traditional Shariah principles might not be adequate to meet the complex requirements of a modern state.

35. Delay in the Making of Constitution of Pakistan during 1947-1956

1. Introduction

- Dual Responsibility: Upon Pakistan's creation on August 14, 1947, the first Constituent Assembly was tasked with two major roles: framing a new constitution and acting as a Federal Legislature.
- Initial Challenges: Constitutional development was not the immediate priority as the government's energy was consumed by the staggering problems of partition, including a massive flood of refugees and the economic disorganization caused by the migration of non-Muslims to India.
- Interim Framework: For nearly a decade, the Government of India Act 1935 served as an amended interim constitution while the country struggled to reach a consensus on its own sovereign document.

2. Bengali's Fear of Suppression

- Administrative Marginalization: Bengalis felt suppressed as the capital was established in Karachi (West Pakistan) rather than Dhaka, and their representation in the judiciary, bureaucracy, and armed forces was negligible.
- Bureaucratic Imbalance: For decades after independence, the civil service was dominated by non-Bengali characters; for example, not a single Bengali officer held an influential position at the center as late as 1968.
- Economic Grievances: East Pakistanis resented that the vast foreign exchange earned from the sale of their jute was primarily spent on the defense of West Pakistan.

3. Absence of Strong Political Party

- League's Decline: Following the deaths of Quaid-i-Azam and Liaquat Ali Khan, the Muslim League failed to function as a unified national party.
- Regional Fragmentation: West Pakistani politicians were often reluctant to share power with their East Pakistani counterparts, leading to the rise of strong regional political parties that effectively ended the League's status as a sole representative body by 1954.

4. Crisis of Leadership

- Vacuum at the Top: There was no leader of Jinnah's stature or vision to fill the void after his passing, which halted the momentum of state-building.
- Sectional Tensions: Western political elites frequently refused to accept Bengali premiers, as seen in the dismissal of Khawaja Nazim-ud-din by the Governor-General despite Nazim-ud-din being a close confidante of Jinnah.

5. Clash Between Traditionalists and Modernists

- Ideological Divide: A significant conflict emerged between Ulemas, who argued that Islam was a complete code of life that should be implemented immediately, and modernists, who believed Islamic principles should be adapted to a modern parliamentary system.

- Orthodoxy vs. Liberalism: This clash between conservatism and liberalism became a primary hurdle that delayed the consensus required to finalize the constitutional draft.

6. Controversy Over the Federal Structure of Constitution

- Representation Disputes: A major deadlock arose regarding the nature of federalism. East Pakistan (with 54% of the population) demanded provincial autonomy and representation based on population.
- Parity and One Unit: To counter the Bengali majority, West Pakistani politicians pushed for the "One Unit" scheme to merge all Western provinces into a single entity to achieve parity with the East, a move that deeply obstructed the constitution-making process.

7. Legislatures' Lack of Interest

- Non-Seriousness: The legislators themselves displayed a lack of interest in their duties. Over a span of seven years, the first Constituent Assembly met for only 116 days.
- Low Attendance: The average attendance in these sessions ranged from only 37 to 56 members out of a total of 76, reflecting a lack of urgency in addressing constitutional issues.

8. Concept of Islamic State

- Secular vs. Religious: There were deeply divergent views on the exact character of the state. One faction believed Pakistan was founded to be a secular democracy, while another insisted it must be an Islamic state where citizens could live according to the Quran and Sunnah.
- Framing Dilemma: Determining the relationship between state and religion remained a dominating and unresolved theme for the framers throughout the first phase of the assembly.

9. Linguistic Problem

- National Language Dispute: Despite East Pakistanis making up the majority and demanding Bengali as a national language, the central leadership insisted on Urdu alone.
- Impact of 1952 Riots: This cultural interference and the resulting linguistic riots in 1952 created a deep gulf between the two wings, making it impossible to reach a national consensus on the constitution for years.

10. Cleavages Within the Ruling Elite

- Bureaucracy vs. Politicians: The rise of powerful civil servants like Ghulam Muhammad led to a clash between the bureaucracy and politicians. This power struggle crystallized into a conflict where the Governor-General exercised executive authority to dismiss premiers and dissolve the assembly.
- Class Conflict: A clash also emerged between the rising middle class in East Pakistan and the powerful Punjabi landlords of the West, whose competing interests further hampered constitutional progress.

36. Salient Features of the Constitution of 1956

1. Introduction

- The Second Constituent Assembly, under the leadership of Chaudhry Muhammad Ali, worked diligently to produce a draft constitution within a single year.
- This draft was presented to the Assembly on January 8, 1956, and was officially promulgated on March 23, 1956.

- Before this, for nearly a decade, the Government of India Act 1935 had served as the amended interim constitution for the new state.

2. Features

- (i) Islamic Character:
 - The state was officially declared an Islamic Republic.
 - The Objectives Resolution was incorporated as the Preamble to the Constitution.
 - The President of the country was required to be a Muslim.
 - Islamic provisions were primarily contained within the Directive Principles of State Policy.
- (ii) Federal System of Government:
 - The Constitution introduced a federal structure with a clear division of powers between the central and provincial governments.
 - Legislative authority was organized into three lists: Federal, Provincial, and Concurrent.
- (iii) Parliamentary Form of Government:
 - A parliamentary system was established where the Prime Minister and the Cabinet were responsible and accountable to the National Assembly.
 - While the President was the head of state, the source notes he was "neither a titular, nor a nominal head" and could perform an effective role in state affairs.
- (iv) Uni-Cameral Legislature:
 - The Parliament consisted of only one chamber, the National Assembly, with a total of 300 members.
 - The seats were divided equally to ensure parity of representation between East and West Pakistan.
- (v) Independence of Judiciary:
 - The Constitution upheld the supremacy and independence of the judiciary.
 - The Head of State was responsible for appointing judges to the superior courts.
- (vi) Introduction of Directive Principles:
 - These principles were laid out in Part 3 of the Constitution to guide state policy.
 - Several of these principles specifically addressed Islamic teachings.
- (vii) Fundamental Rights:
 - Fundamental rights were formally made part of the Constitution and were enforceable by the Supreme Court.
 - Any laws or administrative actions that violated these rights could be legally challenged in court.
- (viii) Official Language:
 - Both Urdu and Bengali were recognized as the official languages of Pakistan.
 - English was permitted to continue as an official language for a maximum period of twenty-five years.

3. Declaration of Martial Law in 1958

- The Constitution of 1956 remained in effect for less than three years.
- On October 7, 1958, President Iskander Mirza declared Martial Law with the support of the military.
- The Constitution was abrogated, the National and Provincial Assemblies were dissolved, and the central and provincial cabinets were dismissed.
- General Mohammad Ayub Khan, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, was appointed as the Chief Martial Law Administrator.
- This event brought an end to the first phase of constitutional government and set the stage for the eventual Constitution of 1962.

37. Era of General Ayub Khan

Introduction

- General Ayub Khan took over in 1958 and immediately announced that a new constitution would be framed for the nation.
- He raised serious doubts about the ingenuity of previous architects like Chaudhry Muhammad Ali, arguing that the 1956 constitution was in complete disjunction with the "genius" of the Pakistani people.
- Ayub Khan believed constitution-making should be an elitist affair conducted by the "most appropriate person".

1. Constitution of 1962

- Promulgation: After scrutiny by a constitution commission under Justice Shahab-ud-din and a Cabinet sub-committee, it was promulgated in June 1962.
- Presidential Form: It established a Presidential system with an extremely powerful President who held much greater concentration of powers than is typical in genuine presidential governments.
- Centralization: The constitution provided a Federal List of 49 items, vesting enhanced power in the President and ensuring the central government remained domineering over the provinces.
- Unicameral Legislature: The parliament consisted of only one house, the National Assembly, whose members were chosen on "personal merits" as political parties were not initially recognized.
- Indirect Elections: The framers envisaged an indirect method of election for the presidency and the assemblies through an electoral college.

2. Institutional Structure System of Basic Democracy

- Establishment: Introduced in October 1959 as a peculiar form of "representational dictatorship".
- Units: The country was divided into 80,000 geographical units, each with an average electorate of 1,000 people who would elect one "Basic Democrat".
- Four-Tier Hierarchy: The system consisted of Union Councils/Committees, Tehsil Councils/Town Committees, District Councils, and Divisional Councils.
- Electoral College: These basic democrats served as an electoral college for the presidency; in 1960, they confirmed Ayub Khan's presidency with a 95.6% "yes" vote.

3. Crooked Democracy (Quasi/Controlled Democracy)

- Composition: The elected members of this system were often uneducated Lambardars, Patwaris, and retired government officers.
- Marginalization: The system effectively disfranchised industrial labor and the intelligentsia, who were considered the most volatile sections of urban society.
- Patronage: Only those groups that benefited directly from government patronage were incorporated, leaving no mechanism for accommodating political opposition.

4. Political Steps

- Policy of Exclusion: Ayub Khan blamed "unruly politicians" for the country's malaise and sought to exclude them from the political process.
- EBDO: He promulgated the Elective Bodies Disqualification Order (EBDO) in 1959, authorizing tribunals to try politicians for misconduct.
- Disqualifications: Roughly 7,000 individuals were forced out of politics through EBDO; notable leaders like Hussain Shaheed Suhrawardy and Qazi Isa were arrested and prosecuted.

5. Press Censorship

- 1959 Ordinance: A Martial Law Ordinance empowered the government to seize newspapers it believed published material likely to "endanger defense" or security.
- Seizures: Major English and Urdu dailies, including The Pakistan Times and Imroze, were seized by the government.
- 1963 Restrictions: A new Press Ordinance banned news related to industrial unrest or strikes and ordered newspapers to publish government-distributed press notes.
- National Press Trust (NPT): An official body was created to monitor and "smoother" independent journalism, financed by 24 industrialists.

6. Law Reforms

- Administrative Control: These reforms gave the government absolute control over the legal profession.
- Judicial Vetting: Judicial appointments were subject to political scrutiny, and judges were interviewed by provincial governors and the President to prevent true judicial independence.

7. Steps against Academia

- Containment of Dissent: Academics were prohibited from publishing works of substance and could not be employed by universities if they showed any sign of public dissent.
- Purges: The government did not brook criticism and purged academics with leftist leanings; dissenters like Safdar Mir were posted to remote areas.
- Writers' Guild: This organization was created with the implicit motive of controlling the literati and poets, though figures like Josh Malih Abadi and Habib Jalib raised their voices against it.

8. Controls and Empowerment of Bureaucracy

- Centralization of Power: Ayub Khan relied extensively on the bureaucracy (specifically the CSPs) for monitoring and functioning the government machinery.
- Delegation: While power was concentrated in Ayub's hands, routine decision-making was delegated to civil servants, while the army maintained a relatively low profile in day-to-day administration.
- Colonial Model: Analysts note that the structure bore a striking similarity to colonial rule, with the President performing a role similar to the British Viceroy.

38. Constitution of 1962

1. Introduction

- Following the 1958 takeover, the martial law government announced that a new constitution would be framed for the nation.
- General Ayub Khan expressed serious doubts about the 1956 constitution, arguing it was in "complete disjunction with the genius of the Pakistani people".
- He believed constitution-making should be an elitist affair conducted by the "most appropriate person" rather than a mass political process.
- A constitution commission led by Justice Shahab-ud-din was established to determine whether a parliamentary or presidential system would best suit the country.
- After review by a Cabinet sub-committee, President Ayub promulgated the new constitution in June 1962.

2. Salient Features

- i. Written Character: The 1962 Constitution was a written document. It was comprised of 250 articles divided into twelve parts and three schedules.
- ii. Nature of the Constitution: Like the 1956 constitution, it was a detailed document. It was characterized as being partly rigid and partly flexible. Notably, the sources state it did not have a representative character because it was "granted by one man".
- iii. Federal Type of Government: The constitution officially maintained a federal structure where powers were divided between the central and provincial governments. It provided a Federal List of 49 items, while all residuary powers were technically assigned to the provinces. Despite this, the central government remained domineering, and the spirit of the document was described as "definitely unitary".
- iv. Presidential Form of Government: The document established a Presidential system with an extremely powerful President. The President held sole authority to appoint ministers, ambassadors, military chiefs, and provincial governors. Ministers were not members of the legislature and could not vote in it. The President also held the power to veto bills passed by the National Assembly.
- v. Unicameral Legislature: The constitution provided for a unicameral legislature, meaning the parliament consisted of only one house: the National Assembly. Seats were allocated to ensure parity of representation between East and West Pakistan.
- vi. Indirect Method of Election: The framers introduced an indirect method of election for both the Presidency and the assemblies. The general public elected members of Basic Democracies, who then served as an electoral college to elect the President and the members of the legislative assemblies.
- vii. Independence of Judiciary: The constitution included safeguards intended to maintain the independence of the judiciary. Superior court judges were appointed by the President and enjoyed security of service. They could only be removed by the President following an inquiry conducted by the Supreme Judicial Council.
- viii. Islamic Provisions: While the word "Islamic" was initially deleted from the state's name, public pressure forced it to be reinserted as the "Islamic Republic of Pakistan". The constitution required the President to be a Muslim and stated that no law should be enacted that was repugnant to Shariah. It also established the Advisory Council of Islamic Ideology and the Islamic Research Institute to ensure legislation aligned with the Quran and Sunnah.

39. Causes of Separation of East Pakistan

1. Introduction

- The geographical separation of East and West Pakistan produced massive administrative, social, and economic problems.
- Because the federal capital was established in West Pakistan, the people of East Pakistan felt neglected and marginalized from the country's inception.
- Significant differences in language and cultural backgrounds placed further obstacles in the way of true national integration.

2. Geographical Factor

- The two wings were separated by one thousand miles of Indian territory, with no common border.
- This physical distance made communication fitful and expensive, leading to constant political and social conflicts.

- Surrounded by Indian influence, the lack of a shared land border embittered relations and eventually brought the country to the verge of collapse.

3. Tussle of Capital

- East Pakistan, containing 55% of the population, argued that the federal capital should have been located in Dhaka rather than Karachi.
- The seat of government in the West allowed ministers, officials, and industrialists there to exert immense influence on national affairs.
- This geographic imbalance created a great economic imbalance, resulting in better jobs and privilege for West Pakistan while leaving the East behind.

4. Language Issue

- Bengalis were primarily concerned with preserving their identity through their native language.
- The central leadership's insistence on Urdu as the only national language was seen as an attack on Bengali culture.
- The resulting linguistic riots in 1952 created a deep and unbridgeable gulf between the two wings.

5. Results of Provincial Elections

- In the 1954 provincial elections, the Muslim League was defeated badly, winning only 10 out of 309 seats in East Pakistan.
- The triumph of the United Front Party led to immediate demands for new elections to the Constituent Assembly and greater provincial autonomy.
- The victory of regional parties proved that the Muslim League had ceased to be a significant representative factor in East Bengal.

6. Dismissal of East Pakistani Politicians

- Governor-General Ghulam Muhammad dismissed Khawaja Nazim-ud-din, a popular Bengali Prime Minister, which was deeply resented in the East.
- West Pakistani political elites frequently refused to accept Bengali leaders like Hussain Shaheed Suhrawardy.
- The central leadership reportedly viewed influential Bengali leaders as being not completely loyal to Pakistan due to their desire to retain their cultural identity.

7. Economic Instability

- At partition, nearly all industrial units were in West Bengal (India), leaving East Pakistan as a "rural slum" despite producing 75% of the world's jute.
- The East lacked jute mills and processing plants, yet the foreign exchange earned from jute was primarily spent on the defense of West Pakistan.
- Subsequent agricultural and industrial reforms during the Ayub era primarily benefited the West, further sharpening economic imbalance.

8. Corruption in Politics

- Political instability was worsened by the dissolution of the first Constituent Assembly.
- Ongoing litigation and the validation of executive overreach by the courts signaled a breakdown in democratic accountability.

9. Pitfalls in Judiciary

- Bias was perceived in judicial appointments, such as when Justice Munir (a Westerner) was appointed Chief Justice over a Bengali candidate, Justice Salah-ud-din.
- This preference for Westerners in high-ranking positions contributed to the alienation of the Bengali intelligentsia.

10. Formation of One Unit

- The "One Unit" scheme merged the Western provinces into a single entity to counter the Bengali majority and achieve parity.
- The move was seen in the East as a conspiracy by Punjabi politicians to obstruct democratic representation.

11. Proclamation of Martial Law (1958)

- The imposition of martial law signaled the rise of a military-bureaucratic oligarchy dominated by West Pakistani interests.
- The centralized power of the army and the presidency further marginalized the East's role in the body politic.

12. Quasi Democracy

- Ayub Khan's Basic Democracies system was seen as a "controlled democracy" that favored uneducated rural elites over the volatile urban intelligentsia.
- This structure effectively disfranchised industrial labor and the educated classes of East Pakistan.

13. Bengali Representation in Army

- Representation in the armed forces was negligible, with Punjabis and Pakhtuns making up 95% of the military.
- As late as 1968, only 2 out of 32 generals were Bengali, leading to a sense of total exclusion from the state's security apparatus.

14. Role of Bureaucracy

- The civil service was dominated by non-Bengalis; for 22 years, no Bengali was appointed Chief Secretary of East Pakistan.
- Bengali representation in the central bureaucracy remained consistently low, reinforcing the wing's status as a perpetual minority.

15. War of 1965

- The war underscored East Pakistan's geographical isolation and vulnerability, as it was left virtually undefended while the focus remained on the West.
- This experience led to a growing demand among Bengalis for an independent defense capability.

16. Incident of Polish Revolt

- Sources note a rising demand during periods of unrest that "the government of East Pakistan should be handed over to the representatives of East Pakistan".

17. Mujeeb's Six Points

- In 1966, Sheikh Mujeeb proposed his "Six Points," which demanded a federal system where the center only controlled defense and foreign affairs.
- He sought separate currencies and control over fiscal policy for the federating units.
- West Pakistani leaders interpreted these points as a design to bring about the disintegration of the country.

18. Agartila Case

- In 1968, the government launched a conspiracy case alleging that Sheikh Mujeeb had met with Indian leaders to plan the secession of East Pakistan.
- The case deteriorated relations further and turned Mujeeb into a hero of the Bengali cause.

19. Conclusion

- The refusal of the power bloc at the center to share power equitably with the Bengali majority was the primary cause of the separation.
- The accumulation of economic, linguistic, and political grievances made the final dismemberment of the state inevitable.

40. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto

A. Early Life

- Birth and Family: Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto was born in 1928 in a prominent Sindhi Shia family near Larkana to Sir Shah Nawaz Bhutto and Begum Nel Lakhi Bai.
- Education: He studied at Cathedral and John Cannon School in Bombay. He later earned a degree in Political Science from the University of California, Berkeley, and studied Law at Christ Church, Oxford.
- Early Career: He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1953 and served as a lecturer of law at Sindh Muslim College.
- Personal Life: He married his first wife, Shireen Amir Begum, in 1943. In 1951, he married Nusrat Ispahani; they had four children: Benazir, Murtaza, Sanam, and Shah Nawaz.

B. Conceptions of Z. A. Bhutto

- i. Populism: Bhutto is described as the first leader to mobilize Pakistani society to the extent that they forgot "primitive personal ties" like tribe and kinship. He utilized the slogan "sovereignty belongs to the people" to challenge dictatorial regimes.
- ii. Socialism: He believed that the attainment of a classless society was only possible through socialism. His slogans emphasized "Bread, Clothing, and Housing" (Roti, Kapra, aur Makan).
- iii. Islamic Socialism: To satisfy a religious society, Bhutto interlinked Islam and socialism, arguing that all religions were inherently revolutionary and that Islam preaches equality, for which socialism is a modern technique.

C. Reforms under Bhutto's Government

- 1. Strategy related to the army: He aimed to minimize the military's role in the political system. He dismissed high-ranking officers like Lt. Gen. Gul Hasan and Air Marshal Rahim to establish civilian supremacy.
- 2. Bureaucratic Reforms: Bhutto reduced the supremacy of the civil service by abolishing the elite status of the CSP and replacing it with a unified structure of 22 grades.

- 3. Land Reforms: In 1972, he set land ceilings at 150 irrigated and 300 non-irrigated acres. Resumed land was redistributed to landless tenants without compensation to original owners. In 1977, ceilings were further reduced to 100 irrigated and 200 non-irrigated acres.
- 4. Economic Reforms: He initiated nationalization of 31 major basic industries, banks, and insurance companies to end the dominance of the "22 families".
- 5. Political Development: His government produced the 1973 Constitution, which was the first consensus-based federal democratic structure in Pakistan. He also launched the nuclear plan and secured the return of 90,000 POWs from India.
- 6. Resistance from Army:
 - i. Constitutional Safeguards: The 1973 Constitution included Article 6, which prescribed the death penalty for subverting the constitution via military coup.
 - ii. Formation of Para-Military Force: He created the Federal Security Force (FSF) to handle civil disturbances so the government would not have to rely on the army.
 - iii. Appeasement to Military: To avoid friction, he increased military expenditure, exempted officers from land reforms, and suppressed the Hamood-ur-Rehman report.
- 7. Reforms in Bureaucracy: He introduced the "lateral entry" system, which allowed technical specialists to be induced into the civil service from outside, though this was often used for political patronage.
- 8. Political Participation in the Provinces:
 - a. Baluchistan: An accord allowed a NAP-JUI coalition to form a government, but it was dismissed in 1973, leading to military operations against a revolt.
 - b. London Plan: The government alleged a conspiracy involving Wali Khan and Sheikh Mujib to plan the secession of Baluchistan and NWFP, using this as a pretext to dismiss the provincial government.
- 9. Check upon Opposition Parties: He restricted political freedoms through constitutional amendments and permitted the indefinite detention without trial of those deemed a threat to state security.
- 10. Check over the Press: He retained the National Press Trust (NPT) to control and censor the media, banning publications like Punjab Punch and Urdu Digest.
- 11. Educational Reforms: He established the National Book Foundation (1972), Quaid-i-Azam University (1973), and Allama Iqbal Open University (1974).

12. Conclusion

- Bhutto provided the "primitive" Pakistani society with an awareness of their political role.
- While he succeeded in formulating an independent foreign policy and winning the hearts of the masses, his conflict with "prestige loving classes" and the army eventually led to his downfall.
- His legacy remains centered on his efforts to create a progressive Islamic state focused on the welfare of the poor.

41. Zia's Strategies for Self Preservation

1. Introduction

- General Zia-ul-Haq came to power on July 5, 1977, after staging the third military coup in Pakistan's history and overthrowing the government of Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.
- In his first speech, Zia defined the introduction of an Islamic system as an essential prerequisite for the country, implying that the transfer of power to civilians was a secondary consideration.

2. Steps against Z.A. Bhutto

- The martial law authorities established a Special Investigation Cell to probe malpractices committed by PPP leaders.
- The Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) charged Bhutto with the murder of Dr. Nazir Ahmad and complicity in the murder of the father of Ahmed Raza Kasuri.
- On April 4, 1979, Z.A. Bhutto was hanged to death following a verdict by a seven-member bench of the Supreme Court.
- Following the execution, political parties were banned, elections were canceled, and top PPP leaders, including Nusrat and Benazir Bhutto, were frequently jailed or placed under house arrest.

3. Holding of Local Bodies Elections

- To minimize the prestige of elected political elites (MPAs and MNAs), Zia introduced local government elections on a non-party basis in 1984.
- These elections allowed major land-owning families and large industrialists to gain direct access to the government, bypassing traditional political party structures.
- The regime used these negotiations to ensure that the PPP would be split, particularly in the Punjab and Sindh.

4. Provisional Constitution Ordinance (PCO)

- When the Supreme Court initially ruled against the martial law takeover, Zia issued the Provisional Constitutional Order (PCO) of 1980, which excluded martial law actions from court jurisdiction.
- In 1981, a second PCO was issued requiring all judges of the Supreme and High Courts to take a new oath of office; those who refused were forced to resign.
- The PCO effectively terminated judicial scrutiny of any "politically important" executive action and declared previous court decisions regarding the legality of martial law void.

5. Referendum of 1984

- Zia sought public endorsement through a referendum held on December 19, 1984.
- The referendum utilized a "loaded question" that asked voters if they wished Pakistan to be an Islamic state; an affirmative vote was interpreted as support for Zia to continue as President for five more years.

6. Holding of Non-Party Based Elections

- Elections for the National and Provincial Assemblies were held in 1985 on a non-party basis, prohibiting political debate on social or economic issues.
- Zia announced his new constitutional framework shortly after the polls without requiring ratification from the newly elected legislature.

7. Military Courts

- Military courts were granted indiscriminate and comprehensive powers, operating outside the civilian judicial framework to detain anyone acting against the regime.
- Senior officials in Zia's cabinet used these courts to "inject terror," implementing punishments like public lashings and hand amputations as martial law regulations.

8. Judicial Measures

- Zia removed the power of judicial review regarding the constitutionalities of executive decisions.

- The judiciary was deprived of its authority to protect civil rights, and the jurisdiction of military tribunals was expanded at the expense of civilian courts.

9. Control over Media

- Strict press censorship was introduced in 1978, with Zia famously stating he could "close down all newspapers for five years" if he chose.
- Journalists who defied these restrictions were given flogging sentences by military courts, and total control was exercised to ensure no articles were "repugnant to the ideology of Pakistan".

10. Revival of the Constitution (RCO)

- On March 2, 1985, Zia issued the Revival of the Constitution Order (RCO), which amended 57 articles and added 6 new ones to the 1973 Constitution.
- These changes shifted the balance of power from the Prime Minister to the President, virtually defacing the original 1973 document.

11. Fate of Muhammad Khan Junejo

- Zia nominated Muhammad Khan Junejo as Prime Minister in 1985, but the relationship soured when Junejo tried to conduct an independent foreign policy and investigate military fiascos like the Ojhri Camp disaster.
- On May 29, 1988, Zia used the controversial Article 58(2)b to dismiss Junejo's government.

12. Enhancement of Provincialism

- To undermine the PPP, Zia sponsored the creation of the Muhajir Qaumi Mahaz (MQM), which fueled ethnic tensions in Sindh.
- While he successfully used economic development to assuage unrest in Baluchistan, his policies led to an explosion of violence between Sindhis and non-Sindhis.

13. Islamization Process

- Zia used Islamization as a primary political resource to restructure Pakistan on Islamic lines.
- Key measures included:
 - The establishment of Shariat Courts and the Council of Islamic Ideology.
 - The Hudood Ordinance (1977), which introduced Islamic punishments for theft, adultery, and the use of liquor.
 - Mandatory deduction of Zakat and Ushr from bank accounts starting in 1980.
 - A revised education policy that made Islamiyat and Pakistan Studies compulsory for all students.
 - The introduction of Islamic laws for women, including the controversial Law of Evidence, which valued a woman's testimony as half that of a man's.

Fourth Part: Present Era

42. Constitution of 1973

1. Introduction

- Following the creation of Pakistan, constitution-making became a highly complex task due to the failure of the first two constitutions.

- Pakistan functioned as a "laboratory for constitutional experiments" during this period of turbulence.
- Facing significant political discontent in the late 1960s and early 1970s, there was an urgent need for a sovereign constitution that reflected the will of the newly formed National Assembly.

2. Drafting and Enactment

- After assuming power, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto invited leaders of parliamentary parties to a meeting on October 17, 1972, which resulted in the "Constitutional Accord".
- A 25-member committee, chaired by Mahmud Ali Kasuri, was appointed on April 17, 1972, to prepare the permanent draft.
- The draft bill was signed by parliamentary leaders on October 20, 1972, and introduced to the Assembly on February 2, 1973.
- The Constitution was approved on April 10, 1973, and officially promulgated on Independence Day, August 14, 1973.

3. Constitution of 1973

- This document is unique as it was the first consensus-based constitution in Pakistan's history.
- It accommodated proposals from across the political spectrum, leading to its unanimous acceptance by almost all major political parties.

4. Features

- i. Written Constitution: It is a written document consisting of 280 Articles categorized into 12 chapters and seven schedules.
- ii. Parliamentary System: The constitution established a parliamentary form of government where the President serves as the Head of State and the Prime Minister serves as the Head of Government with the power to appoint ministers.
- iii. Procedure of Amendment: The document is described as partly rigid and partly flexible; amendments require a two-thirds majority in both houses and subsequent presidential assent.
- iv. Bicameral Legislature: It introduced a bicameral system consisting of two houses: the National Assembly (Lower House) and the Senate (Upper House).
- v. Supremacy of Judiciary: The constitution provides for a free and independent judiciary that serves as the guarantor for interpreting the document in its true sense.
- vi. Islamic Ideology: The 1973 version is more Islamic in character than its predecessors, aiming to establish a real Islamic system in all aspects of social life.
- vii. Rule of Law: It explicitly states that the government cannot take action against a citizen without due process of law.
- viii. Principles of Policy: These principles guide the basic objectives and future plan of action for state agencies.
- ix. Direct Mode of Election: It prescribes a direct system of election for members of the legislative assemblies, though the Senate retains an indirect mode.
- x. Official Language: Urdu was declared the national language under Article 251, with a requirement for the government to implement its use officially within fifteen years.
- xi. Islamic Provisions: Islam is the state religion, and the state is required to enable Muslims to order their lives according to the Quran and Sunnah. It also established the Council of Islamic Ideology to ensure laws align with Islamic teachings.

5. Conclusion

- The 1973 Constitution represents a major step forward in the creation of an Islamic democratic state.
- It is considered a notable achievement because it has served as a symbol of national consensus since its inception.
- The document successfully strengthened the position of civilian leaders and created a framework for a party-based political system.
- While it was suspended by General Zia-ul-Haq in 1977, it remains the most widely accepted constitutional framework in the nation's history.

43. Ethnicity in Pakistan

1. Introduction

- Pakistan is an ethnically plural society that has faced a deep Muslim consciousness which originally transcended ethnic, linguistic, and cultural differences during the struggle for independence.
- The current situation has deteriorated, with Karachi becoming nearly ungovernable due to politically motivated targeted killings, sectarian violence, and the illegal occupation of property.
- Ethnic discord is closely linked to the politics of land and real estate, creating multifarious local, national, and international challenges.

2. Factors Behind the Ethnicity

- i. Decline of Muslim League: After partition, the Muslim League—which was a movement rather than a structured political party—suffered a massive setback with the early death of Quaid-i-Azam. This allowed military and civil services to rule directly or indirectly, creating a sense of deprivation in smaller provinces.
- ii. Linguistic Division: Unity has been dismantled by blind obedience to ethnic political parties.
 - In Punjab, there is a rising consciousness for a separate Saraiki province.
 - In Baluchistan, nationalist consciousness has cut across tribal divisions due to a sense of exclusion from state power.
 - In Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, there are demands to rename the province and recognize specific regional identities.
 - In Sindh, demographic changes caused by migration (Muhajirs) and the allotment of barrage land to outsiders have hurt local sensitivities and created a "web of discords".
- iii. Karachi as Hub of Ethnic Discord: The city is physically divided along ethnic lines, with nearly 75% of the population living in segregated neighborhoods. Because state institutions are weak or corrupt, citizens rely on ethnic organizations for jobs, domicile certificates, and even dispute resolution. This has led to voting strictly on ethnic lines and the rise of a powerful underground economy controlled by criminal gangs with political links.
- iv. Provincial Differences: Pakistan is "stuck in the deep marshes" of provincial differences which internal and external enemies exploit. Jinnah famously warned that citizens must "give up this poison" of provincialism for the sake of national survival.
- v. Ignorance of the Issues: Many of these issues are ignored or treated as infinitesimal, yet they must be addressed to achieve national glory.
- vi. Issue of Kalabagh Dam: This issue has become a major source of provincial disharmony, even though the dam could potentially revitalize the country's agricultural and industrial sectors.
- vii. Non-availability of Socio-Economic Justice: Ethnic issues are inextricably linked to the social, economic, and political failures of the state structure.

- viii. Negation of True Democracy: Politics has been confined to personalities and the "personal fiefdoms" of political leaders, scions of landed families, and industrialists who prioritize personal gain over national philosophy.
- ix. Autocratic and Centralized Rule: Highly centralized state power has failed to provide popular governance and has resisted the equitable distribution of power, widening the gap between the "haves" and "have-nots".
- x. Absence of Power Sharing: The failure to share power was the primary cause for the creation of Bangladesh, which in turn encouraged regionalism in other smaller provinces.
- xi. Provincial Disharmony: Deprivation in smaller provinces has encouraged internal dissension. The center continues to enjoy power over the majority of subjects that should ideally be decentralized.

3. Solutions to Ethnic Discord

- i. Comprehensive Plan: A plan is needed to bring ethnic politics into mainstream politics and to foster faith in constitutional means for redressing grievances.
- ii. Careful Planning for Karachi: Politicians must rise above ethnic and vote-related interests to negotiate the creation of effective urban governance institutions.
- iii. Isolation of Criminals: There is a critical need to completely isolate criminal elements from their ethnic moorings through even-handed administration.
- iv. Counter Foreign Hands: Countering foreign strategies that exploit Pakistan's internal divisions must be a high-priority agenda item.
- v. Exchange of Students: Frequent academic and cultural exchanges between provinces can promote friendship and understanding among the youth.
- vi. Equal Opportunities for All: Fiscal and industrial policies should be reviewed to reverse demographic trends by making rural areas more economically viable, including the establishment of tax-free zones.
- vii. Proper Devolution of Power: Giving power to the people where it actually belongs will strengthen the federation, remove disharmony, and restore national cohesion.
- viii. Steps for Moulding the Ethnic Division: Policy planners should recognize ethnic variations as a reality and mold them into the nation-building process rather than ignoring them.

44. New Provinces in Pakistan

1. Introduction

- The constitution defines Pakistan as a federal state where power is shared between the federal government and the federating units.
- While Pakistan inherited this federal system from British India, a true spirit of federalism has struggled to evolve, leading to mistrust between the center and provinces regarding resource distribution.
- The current debate was largely sparked by the 18th Amendment's decision to rename the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) as Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KP), which faced opposition from the non-Pashtun population.
- Recently, the National Assembly passed a resolution in favor of creating a new province in South Punjab.

2. Demand for New Provinces

- Demands for new administrative units are raised periodically, often driven by ethnic grounds, dissatisfaction with resource distribution, or the socio-economic backwardness of specific areas.
- Major political parties and the media have become active participants in either espousing or opposing these demands.

3. The Case for South Punjab

- The demand is primarily based on socio-economic grounds rather than purely ethnic ones; notably, the proposed name is "South Punjab" rather than the "Seraiki Province" to account for the dispersed demography of Seraiki speakers.
- South Punjab comprises approximately 48.5% of the total area of the current Punjab province and contains about 31.57% of its population.
- Social indicators in this region are poor, with 43.11% of the population living below the poverty line, compared to roughly 27% in the rest of Punjab.
- Critics question if a new administrative setup will truly help the poor, as the region's agrarian economy is largely controlled by powerful landlords who already hold high executive posts.

4. Restoration of Bahawalpur Province

- This demand is unique because it is based on historical and administrative status as a former princely state rather than linguistic or ethnic factors.
- In 1951, an agreement was signed that treated Bahawalpur as a province for administrative and legislative purposes, though this ended with the formation of the "One Unit" scheme.
- Many residents of Bahawalpur oppose the "Seraiki Province" because they fear it would undermine their specific claim to restoring Bahawalpur's provincial status.

5. Future of FATA (Federally Administered Tribal Area)

- There is a divide between those who want FATA merged with Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and those who demand it be made a separate province.
- A Grand Jirga of tribal representatives has demanded a separate province with its own local government and judicial system.
- Legally, FATA is governed under Article 247 of the constitution, which places it under the direct authority of the President through the Governor of KP, excluding the jurisdiction of the Parliament and higher courts.

6. The Case for Hazara Province

- The movement for a Hazara province gained significant momentum as a reaction to the renaming of NWFP to KP, as the local population felt the new name did not represent their non-Pashtun identity.
- The Hazara Division is not ethnically homogenous, consisting of Hindko speakers in districts like Abbottabad and Mansehra, and Pashto speakers in Battagram and Torghar.
- Proponents argue the region is economically viable due to its wealth of minerals, natural resources, and potential for tourism and hydroelectric projects.

7. Prospects and Challenges: Amendment of Constitutional Provisions

- Creating new provinces requires a complex constitutional amendment process under Article 239.
- This involves a two-thirds majority in both the National Assembly and the Senate, followed by the consent of the relevant Provincial Assembly (also by a two-thirds majority).
- Achieving such a high level of consensus is considered extremely difficult in the current environment of coalition politics.

8. Conflicts on Distribution of Resources

- A major driver for new provinces is the perceived inequitable distribution of development funds, which are often concentrated in metropolitan cities while remote areas are neglected.

- There are ongoing disagreements regarding the National Finance Commission (NFC) Awards and the distribution of river water.

9. Economic Implications

- New provincial governments would have their own budgets, potentially allowing them to focus on local economic strengths, such as cotton in South Punjab or hydroelectric power in KP.
- However, creating new units will significantly increase non-development expenditure (administrative costs), which would place a heavy burden on taxpayers and the national economy.

10. Rise of Ethnic and Linguistic Identities

- Renaming provinces on ethnic lines can trigger a chain reaction, encouraging other groups to demand their own units.
- For example, the renaming of KP was followed by intensified demands for a Mohajir Province and a South Sindh Province, leading to ethnic tensions and violence.
- Scholars warn that if not managed carefully, these demands could promote sub-nationalism and weaken the federation.

11. Conclusion

- The sources suggest that the issue is often used by political parties for point-scoring rather than addressing the genuine will of the people.
- The real solution may lie in the proper devolution of power to the local level and providing citizens with easier access to justice and social security.
- Any decision to create new provinces should be made cautiously through a national commission and should consider the aspirations of the local population, perhaps through a referendum.

45. Causes of Failure of Democracy in Pakistan

1. Over-developed State Structure

- Pakistan inherited a strong military and bureaucracy from the British colonial era, which used these institutions to control society.
- The army emphasized Islam as a unifying force and maintained a culture of discipline, professionalism, and "esprit de corps".
- Initially, the army's ideology was largely secular, and it only became involved in political duties due to the precarious nature of the state in its early years, such as communal riots and the Kashmir conflict.

2. Failure of Pakistan Muslim League

- The League lacked internal democracy and was dominated by the upper-class landed gentry from the United Provinces of British India.
- It failed to mature into a stable democratic party capable of holding together the nation's diverse ethnic and cultural groups.

- Unlike the Indian National Congress, the League did not prepare itself for a post-independence role and disintegrated into rival factions shortly after the creation of Pakistan.

3. Over-ambitious Military Leadership

- The military emerged as the most formidable and autonomous political actor, capable of influencing the direction of political change.
- While initially hesitant to take over, military commanders gradually entered the decision-making process due to the failure of civilian authorities to maintain law and order.
- The military's organized nature and its pool of skilled manpower made it a dominant force during periods of civilian institutional weakness.

4. Segmented Political Leaders

- In the early years, the absence of a written constitution meant that democratic myths were only weakly instilled in the leadership.
- Non-party Prime Ministers were often appointed by the Head of State rather than being chosen by an electorate, which undermined democratic norms.
- While street demonstrations frequently brought down governments (such as in 1968, 1971, and 1977), these actions were not always equated with genuine democratic processes.

5. Weak Tradition of Civilian Supremacy

- Analysts suggest that characteristics deeply rooted in the nation's polity, rather than just security threats, impeded democratic development.
- Essentials for democracy, such as disciplined political parties and a participatory mass electorate, were largely missing during the state's first years.
- The lack of continuity in economic and social development further destabilized the political system.

6. Low Level of Political Socialization

- Meaningful participation of the public in political affairs has been minimal, leading to a lack of wide public awareness and effective public opinion.
- This vacuum allowed the political system to be dominated by ambitious and corrupt leaders.
- Military rule often sought to legitimize itself by attacking democratic ideals, leaving political institutions in disrepute.

7. Feudalistic Social Structure

- The country's semi-feudal system, with its rigid hierarchy and sets of obligations, provided "inhospitable soil" for democracy.
- Traditional power brokers—wealthy, large land-holding families—often prioritized their material interests over national democratic principles.

8. Interruptions in Electoral Process

- The repeated dismissal or overthrow of elected regimes and the alteration of constitutions to suit existing rulers has prevented democratic values from taking root.
- Elections have often been tainted by design or manipulated by overzealous officials, hindering the development of a fair electoral culture.

9. Criminalization of Politics

- The electoral process has at times legitimized "crime syndicates," granting acceptability to individuals who used public office for the plunder of national resources.
- A lack of checks on executive power has led to what some observers call "sham democracy," causing the public to lose faith in the political system.

10. Crisis of Governance

- Governance has failed because elections are often not free and fair, and there is a lack of accountability.
- The "lethal combination" of powerful families and weak institutions has resulted in the subversion of the law in favor of personal and informal power.
- Sovereignty has been equated with powerful governments rather than the rights of free citizens.

11. Weak Organized Political Parties

- Mainstream parties have often been dominated by two powerful families (the Bhuttos and the Sharifs), creating a de-facto two-party system that leaves other provinces feeling unrepresented.
- Other political parties remain on the fringes, often centered on local personalities or feudal loyalties rather than national ideologies.

12. Crisis of Leadership

- There is a perception that there are few real politicians left; many potential leaders fear joining politics due to the risk of military persecution.
- The dynastic character of political parties is seen as a major obstacle to the development of a healthy party system.
- Many leaders have demonstrated authoritarian tendencies once they achieve power, rather than promoting democratic norms.

13. Dynastical Rule

- A few powerful families dominate both the government and the opposition, with different family members often belonging to rival parties to protect their interests.
- This control extends into the senior bureaucracy, judiciary, and military, ensuring that the elite maintain their hold on the economy and social services.

14. Suspension of Constitution

- Pakistan has had three different constitutions (1956, 1962, and 1973), with the first two failing due to political turbulence.
- The 1973 Constitution, while widely respected, has been suspended twice under military governments and repeatedly amended to shift the balance of power.

15. Ineffectiveness of Parliament

- Both political and military leaders have manipulated the parliament; for example, President Zia dismissed PM Junejo despite the constitutional framework.
- Parliamentarians have often failed to develop the National Assembly as a primary forum for national debate and legislation.

16. Indian Security Threat

- The constant perceived threat from India and border conflicts have politicized the policy-making elite and encouraged the rise of non-democratic elements, including the army.
- These security concerns have often been used to justify the continued dominance of the military in national affairs.

17. Role of Intelligence Agencies

- The intelligence services (Military Intelligence and ISI) have become major actors in national politics, often shaping candidate choices and voter options.
- Agencies have been used to manipulate anti-corruption investigations and encourage politicians to join military-preferred parties.

18. Ethnic and Provincial Division

- Highly centralized and unrepresentative governance has created deep-seated grievances among various ethnic groups.
- The state has failed to evolve institutional mechanisms to address these divisions, and provincial autonomy is often bypassed in practice.
- Political parties themselves are often divided along ethnic lines, with specific parties being strong only in certain regions (e.g., PPP in Sindh, ANP in NWFP).

19. Segmented Political Leaders (Power Disputes)

- A perennial dispute exists over who should wield political power and how, characterized by an absence of agreed-upon "ground rules" for politics.
- Military and bureaucratic governments often bypass popular leaders in favor of "imposed" individuals who rely on corruption or demagoguery to stay in power.

20. Political Violence

- The injection of violence into politics has eliminated the room for democratic difference of opinion.
- Politics has reached a stage where dissent can lead to physical danger, undermining the patience and tolerance required for a functioning democracy.

46. Steps for the Strength of Democracy

1. Introduction

- Throughout its history, Pakistan has struggled to reconcile conflicting visions of its nationhood, particularly regarding the role of Islam in public life and the aspirations of different ethnic groups.
- The state has traditionally evolved as a centralized system run primarily by the military and bureaucracy.
- To support true democracy, the country must focus on developing three fundamental foundations: an independent judiciary, transparent elections, and a vigorous parliament.

2. Reform in Judiciary

- The judiciary in Pakistan has a long record of subservience to political direction, with only a few cases where it preserved its independence.
- There is an urgent need to revamp the judiciary to make it more professional, efficient, and responsive.

- A strong judiciary is essential because it must be capable of standing up against abuses of the government system.

3. Respect for Dissident Groups

- A functioning democracy must respect dissent and opposition.
- The system must recognize the principle of majority rule while simultaneously guaranteeing the protection of minorities.
- Democracy relies on building public faith in electoral contestation as the primary means for different groups to acquire or transfer power.

4. Reformation of the Political Party

- The structure of political parties in Pakistan needs deep reform to overcome the lack of good governance.
- Current political institutions are weakened by a lack of political tolerance and inconsistent identity.
- Beyond legal provisions, there must be progress in building civic virtue and a civic spirit; without this culture, factional anarchy or authoritarian rule will continue to thrive.

5. Creation of an Independent Election Commission

- A must for the democratic process is a commission with broad powers to set and enforce election standards.
- It should have the authority to enforce a ban on election-related activities by civilian or military officers of the government.
- The sources suggest appointing a world-class chairman from the ranks of Pakistan's most distinguished and internationally known personalities to ensure its success.

6. Internal Party Elections

- "Leadership sclerosis" is identified as a major issue for political parties in the region.
- Parties should be required to hold internal elections at both national and provincial levels at regular intervals (e.g., every two years).
- Participation should be open to all members, including those at odds with the current leadership, to allow a viable second-tier of leaders to emerge.

7. Steps for Free Media

- A free press is described as the "only safeguard" against the worst abuses of the electoral system, such as voter intimidation or candidate manipulation.
- The growth and expansion of print media is seen as one of the most positive outcomes of democratization in Pakistan.
- Freedom of the press is considered an irreversible trend that is essential for the continued sustenance of the democratic process.

8. Making of New Provinces

- The current federal scheme is often rendered ineffective because Punjab dominates all other units in almost every respect.
- Increasing the number of provinces could ensure that no single federating unit remains dominant.
- New provinces could help various ethnic groups feel empowered within their own units, provided the process is accompanied by genuine provincial autonomy and a reduction in the center's role.

9. Importance of Provincial and Local Government

- Smaller units of government serve as the logical training ground for future national leaders.
- Current local government structures are often hindered because they are "monitored" by military officers, which the sources describe as a "recipe for failure".
- Local institutions must be allowed to work independently, subject only to accountability through subsequent polls or the judicial system.

10. Implementation of the Constitution

- While the 1973 Constitution reflected a broad national consensus, it has rarely been fully implemented since its inception.
- The central government has a history of micro-managing provinces and holding constitutional provisions in abeyance during military regimes.
- The survival of democracy requires a total reversion to the original constitution, with a commitment from the military and elected executives to submit themselves entirely to its rules.

47. Energy Crisis in Pakistan

1. Reasons for the Energy Crisis

- i. Unrealistic plans and improper implementation: These are identified as foundational contributors to the current crisis.
- ii. Failure of introducing new projects: The state has struggled to launch and maintain new energy initiatives over time.
- iii. Underutilization of resources: Existing resources have not been fully harnessed to meet national demand.
- iv. Circular debt: This is a major problem where government institutions and departments fail to pay their electricity bills, sapping the profit margins of supply companies and leading to power shortages.
- v. International oil prices: Pakistan's energy generation relies heavily on expensive oil. As international prices increase, the cost of electricity rises, especially because generation firms have failed to transition to gas or coal turbines.
- vi. Provincial prejudices: Ongoing grievances and conflicting demands among provinces regarding the installation of new projects hinder progress.
- vii. Water shortage: Pakistan fails to store most of its water, allowing it to fall into the sea unused. A lack of small and big dams limits hydel power generation.
- viii. Transmission losses: A significant amount of produced electricity never reaches consumers due to inefficiencies and technical losses in the supply lines.
- ix. Power wastage: Energy is frequently wasted in households where electric utensils and lights are left on unnecessarily.
- x. Theft of Electric power: Illegal utilization of electricity is widespread, and employees of power generation companies are often given free electricity.
- xi. Accelerating demand: Demand for power is increasing manifold across household, agricultural, and industrial sectors.
- xii. Minimal research/exploration: There is a critical lack of research into new energy avenues, and the government claims it lacks the resources to open them.

2. Immediate Efforts/Goals

- i. RPPs (Rental Power Plants): These have been utilized as an immediate step to fulfill basic needs, though the source notes this power is expensive and should not be a long-term strategy.
- ii. Stabilizing industrial sector: The government aims to prioritize industrial energy needs to stabilize the sector and enhance national prosperity.
- iii. Limiting commercial supply hours: This involves transferring power supply from residential areas to industrial units to maintain productivity.

3. Short-term Goals

- i. Reviving non-functional power plants: The government seeks to provide the necessary resources to bring idle power plants back into operation.
- ii. Revamping the transmission system: This includes replacing damaged supply lines to reduce the amount of electricity lost during transit.
- iii. Thar coal project: While bureaucratic hurdles have slowed its pace, this project could provide huge reserves of coal and oil, potentially fulfilling Pakistan's energy needs for five centuries.
- iv. IPI gas pipeline project: Starting the Iran-Pakistan-India joint gas pipeline to reduce the burden on the local energy sector.
- v. Renewable energy sources: Shifting focus toward solar, tidal, nuclear, and coal energy, as seen in other countries.

4. Long-term Goals

- i. Conforming foreign policy and energy needs: Launching a foreign policy that makes acquiring energy a top priority to attract foreign investors to the sector.
- ii. Construction of New Dams: Building consensus among provinces to construct dams that provide both cheap electricity and water for irrigation.
- iii. Transparency: Establishing clear and open processes in energy management.
- iv. Efficient techniques and usage: Implementing modern techniques for generation and encouraging efficient consumption.
- v. Measures against power theft: Using media to launch awareness campaigns so the public understands the serious legal consequences of stealing electricity.

48. Agricultural Problems of Pakistan

1. Lack of proper-utilization of Land

- Out of 90 million acres of cultivable land in Pakistan, only 54 million acres are currently under cultivation.
- Approximately 70% of the cropped area is located in Punjab, followed by 20% in Sindh, less than 10% in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, and only 1% in Balochistan.
- While successive governments have attempted to bring new areas under cultivation, nearly 2 million hectares still require significant effort to be properly utilized.

2. Lack of utilization of manpower

- The rural labor force consists of approximately 16 million people, but only 15% are paid workers, while the rest are self-employed.
- The government has failed to promote agriculture as a lucrative profession, causing young people to avoid it due to lack of stable monthly income.
- It is estimated that the labor of about two million workers is severely wasted in this sector.

3. Inadequate Markets

- Pakistan is considered a limited market from an agricultural perspective.
- The quality of produced goods like cotton and rice often fails to meet foreign standards, which prevents the country from earning substantial exporting revenue.
- High inflation rates have further decreased the purchasing power of the common people, affecting market stability.

4. Profligate holdings

- This refers to small, uneconomic cultivating units; roughly 65% of farmers hold only about 15% of the total farmland in units of two hectares or less.
- These small sizes prevent the effective application of modern cultivation processes.
- Bureaucratic interests often divert limited agricultural extension services and credit facilities away from small farmers toward larger, more prosperous ones.

5. Issue of Water logging and Salinity

- Approximately 15 lakh acres have been rendered unfit for cultivation due to the twin problems of water logging and salinity.
- What was once considered one of the best irrigation systems in the world has deteriorated, leading to a massive waste of potentially productive land.

6. Defective Land tenure system

- About 50% of farmland in Pakistan is cultivated by tenants who enjoy little security and have very few rights.
- While these tenants have legal rights and obligations, land owners frequently fail to provide them with their proper due, leading to systemic instability.

7. Deficiency of water-supply

- Scant rainfall makes 80% of cropping dependent on irrigation, yet inadequate water facilities limit the expansion of cropped areas.
- Pakistan fails to build enough dams to store water, causing much of it to flow into the sea unused and creating severe water deficiencies during the winter.

8. Shortage of extension services

- Agricultural extension services, which should provide farmers with knowledge on multiple cropping, pest control, and seed bed preparation, are largely inactive in Pakistan.
- There is a critical lack of systematic training for farmers on how to use physical inputs and water resources effectively.

9. Low per acre yield

- Pakistan's per-acre yield is among the lowest in the world, approximately one-third of what is produced in other countries.
- This low productivity is primarily attributed to widespread illiteracy among farmers and the use of unskilled, outdated techniques.

10. Inadequate Rural infrastructure

- A lack of transport and communication networks restricts the mobility of the rural population and prevents the timely delivery of crops to markets.
- Many of Pakistan's 100,000 villages lack basic infrastructural facilities like metaled roads, medical clinics, and hygienic facilities, often resulting in raw materials rotting before they can be sold.

11. Inadequate supply of Inputs

- The supply of essential modern inputs—including improved seeds, chemical fertilizers, and pesticides—is insufficient to meet real requirements.
- There is also a significant shortage of mechanized machinery necessary for sustained progress in agricultural productivity.

12. Lack of Agro-Based Services

- The sector suffers from a lack of integrated agro-based industries such as livestock, dairy, poultry, and fisheries.
- This deficiency acts as a major setback to the overall agriculture sector and negatively impacts the quality of life for farming communities.

49. Solutions of Agricultural Problems of Pakistan

1. Increase in Irrigation Facilities

- The government should prioritize the construction of hydraulic projects to meet the demands of irrigation.
- The state should initiate the building of small dams across the country.
- In areas where rainfall is insufficient to support crops, the government should facilitate the installation of tube-wells.

2. Agricultural Research

- Agricultural research institutes should be established in various regions to develop high-yield and short-duration crops.
- Research efforts should focus on creating disease-resistant varieties of Pakistan's major cash crops.
- The introduction of new seeds and modern cultivation techniques is essential to achieving a breakthrough in agricultural productivity.
- Technical improvements should aim to optimize crop combinations for difficult soil and climatic conditions.

3. Agricultural Price Policy

- It is recommended that the government take a lead role in determining crop prices to ensure stability.
- A formal price policy is necessary to protect farmers from the exploitation of middlemen.

4. Credit Policy

- The government should provide direct credit assistance to farmers, including the provision of subsidized seeds.
- Patronage is needed to help farmers launch new projects and install necessary infrastructure like tube-wells and water supply schemes.
- New agricultural banks should be opened across Pakistan to facilitate easier access to financial resources for the farming community.

5. Cooperative Movement

- Farmers should be encouraged to understand that collective efforts can protect them from common economic dangers.
- The government should promote the setting up of voluntary organizations where farmers can pool their resources for various agricultural operations.

6. Reclamation Projects

- Building on the example of the Salinity Control and Reclamation Project (SCARP) of 1959, the government should introduce more initiatives to reclaim land.
- Specific focus is needed on reclaiming vast areas that have been affected by water-logging and salinity.

7. Farm Mechanization

- Modernized ways of irrigating and cultivating the land should be promoted.
- The government should provide essential machinery, such as spray machines, bulldozers, tractors, and harvesters.
- By providing this equipment, the state can help share the additional financial burden currently placed on individual farmers.

8. Land Reforms

- The state should redistribute land among tenants, farmers, and cultivators to ensure more equitable and efficient land use.
- Historical data indicates that after partition, landowners owned approximately 53% of the total land, and reforms are seen as a way to enhance the overall utilization of agricultural land in the country.

50. Industrial Problems of Pakistan

Introduction

- Industry holds a key position in national development, as it increases income, creates jobs, and improves the balance of payments by producing exportable goods and substituting imports.
- At the time of partition in 1947, Pakistan inherited a very weak industrial base, as only 5% of the large industrial facilities in British India were located in the territories that became Pakistan.
- The country began with almost no institutional, financial, or energy resources, and subsequent governments struggled to implement policies that could effectively expedite industrialization.

1. Terrorism

- Terrorist activities are currently the most significant obstacle facing the industrial sector.
- Widespread insecurity has persuaded both foreign and local investors to withdraw their capital and invest in other countries instead of Pakistan.

2. Power Shortage

- Power breakdowns and frequent load-shedding serve as major constraints on industrial productivity.

- Due to the scarcity of power, many industrial units are forced to operate well below their actual production capacity.

3. Controversial Industrial Strategy

- Past governments failed to adopt a balanced approach toward industrialization.
- Key issues remained unresolved, such as the balance between agricultural and industrial sectors, rural versus urban development, and the choice between capital-intensive and labor-intensive industries.

4. Lack of Capital

- The industrial sector faces a severe shortage of capital because investors do not view Pakistan as a secure or stable place for their money.
- This lack of financial resources has directly hindered overall industrial progress and modernization.

5. Limited Markets

- The domestic market is small for many products because the income of the poor has remained largely stagnant in real terms.
- High inflation and competition from foreign investors have further narrowed the market for locally produced goods.

6. Lack of Technical Know-how

- The industrial labor force in Pakistan is generally unskilled, uneducated, and untrained.
- This lack of technical expertise leads to lower efficiency and sometimes results in avoidable casualties within the industrial sector.

7. Lack of Infrastructure Facilities

- Inadequate access to transport networks is a serious challenge.
- A shortage of transport facilities often means that raw materials rot or deteriorate before they can reach industrial units for processing.

8. Absence of Industrial Research

- Pakistan lacks specialized industrial research institutes to discover new production techniques.
- This deficiency results in high production costs, making Pakistani-made commodities very expensive compared to international competitors.

9. Lack of Industrial Consultancy Firms

- There is a lack of firms providing the proper consultation and advice needed to enhance production and profit margins.
- The absence of these services makes resolving complex industrial issues much more difficult for investors.

10. Provincial Prejudices

- Provincial governments frequently disagree with the industrial projects launched by the central government.
- Unresolved grievances and competing provincial demands often lead to significant delays in the implementation of vital industrial projects.

11. Unbalanced Industrial Structure

- Governments have sometimes initiated unrealistic industrial plans that fail to balance consumer and capital goods industries.
- Current taxation policies often favor the consumer goods industry, which inadvertently increases the final cost of manufactured goods.

12. Nationalization

- The policy of nationalization introduced in 1972 acted as a major obstruction to industrial growth.
- This policy severely damaged the private industrial sector, causing investment to drop from 1,358 million rupees in 1970–71 to just 650 million rupees by 1976–77.

51. Solutions of Industrial Problems of Pakistan

1. Steps against Terrorism

- The government must take concrete steps against terrorist activities, as security is the most significant obstacle to industrial growth.
- Improving the security situation is essential to regaining the confidence of both foreign and local investors, who currently prefer investing in other countries.

2. Steps against Power Shortage

- Addressing power shortages is critical to ensuring that industrial units can operate at their actual production capacity rather than being constrained by load-shedding.
- Long-term solutions should include the government providing cheap energy to the industrial sector to help lower production costs.

3. Clear-cut Industrial Strategy

- A balanced approach is needed to resolve long-standing issues, such as the balance between agricultural and industrial sectors and rural versus urban development.
- The strategy must define the role of small-scale versus large-scale industries and choose appropriately between capital-intensive and labor-intensive models.
- Future policies should clearly outline the boundaries and cooperation between the public and private sectors.

4. Foundation of Industrial Finance Institutions

- To address the severe lack of capital, the government should establish and support public and private financial institutions.
- Existing institutions like the Pakistan Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation (PICIC), Industrial Development Bank of Pakistan (IDBP), and National Development Finance Corporation (NDFC) should provide necessary loans to help industrialists reopen or modernize their units.

5. Search for New Markets

- The government should actively search for new international markets for Pakistani products through public-private partnerships.
- Efforts must also be made to increase the purchasing power of the local population to broaden the domestic market for manufactured goods.

6. Technical Education and Knowledge

- Specialized institutes should be established to impart technical training and education to industrial workers.
- A more skilled and trained labor force would increase efficiency and help reduce avoidable accidents and casualties within factories.

7. Steps for Improved Infrastructure

- Access to the industrial sector must be improved by enhancing transport and communication networks.
- Reliable infrastructure ensures that raw materials reach factories on time without rotting and reduces the overall production cost of finished goods.

8. Setting of Industrial Research Institutes

- Establishing research institutes is necessary to discover new production techniques that are currently missing in Pakistan.
- Scientific research is the key to reducing high production costs, making Pakistani commodities more competitive in international markets.

9. Fiscal Incentives

- Following models like China's, Pakistan should offer tax reductions and other fiscal incentives to attract and retain investors.
- The state should provide additional support in the form of subsidized land and cheap utilities to facilitate industrial expansion.

52. Education Problems of Pakistan

1. Unrealistic plans and improper implementation

- The education sector suffers from a lack of a consistent long-term strategy, with the government frequently changing its approach.
- With every change in government, there is a corresponding shift in education policy and structure.
- Education has historically failed to remain the first priority of the government, leading to persistent issues in the sector.

2. Crescendo Approach

- Policy makers often set targets that are unrealistic and do not consider practical constraints.
- An example of this is the attempt to equalize public and private sector schools within a single year, which is considered an extremely difficult task.

3. Lack of facilities

- Public schools frequently lack basic necessities such as lighting and clean, friendly atmospheres.
- There is a critical shortage of hygienic latrines, functional desks, and modern teaching equipment.
- Deteriorating infrastructure and falling standards widen the social and economic divide, increasing ethnic and religious alienation.

4. Low rate of students' enrollment

- Pakistan has one of the highest student drop-out rates in the world.
- The net primary enrollment rate is 65%, which is significantly lower than neighbors like Bangladesh (75%) and India (77%).
- Literacy rates are skewed, with only 30% literacy in rural areas compared to 70% in urban areas.
- Girls face particular barriers, as two-thirds of villages lack a female school within one kilometer.

5. Brain Drain

- Teaching is not viewed as a materially attractive profession in Pakistan.
- Many qualified teachers and intellectuals leave the country permanently to seek better-paying jobs abroad.

6. Under-utilizing elite schools scholars in teaching

- There is a significant gap between public and private schooling because the government does not effectively utilize the expertise of scholars engaged in elite schools.
- The state remains hesitant to hire these high-quality teachers, which further widens the educational divide among students.

7. Red-Tapism and Corruption in hiring process of teachers

- Many teachers are hired based on political relationships with local MNAs rather than merit.
- In some rural areas, hired teachers do not attend their schools; instead, they hire a substitute at a lower rate and keep the majority of the salary for themselves.
- Provincial departments lack the resources to monitor these practices and curb widespread bribery.

8. Absence of Teacher Training

- The government sector lacks adequate facilities for the professional training of school teachers.
- Existing regional training centers are insufficient in number and quality to meet the needs of the teaching force.

9. Make Teachers job attractive

- Currently, teaching is often treated as a temporary "time pass" job by students between degrees.
- The hiring process, poor pay packages, and lack of facilities make the profession unattractive to highly skilled professionals.

10. Non-existence of the Complaint desks

- There is a total absence of complaint desks in public schools, reflecting a lack of government interest in addressing grievances.
- The lack of such a mechanism prevents parents from having a formal way to discuss their children's problems.

11. Absence of Parents-teachers coordination

- A strong divide exists between teachers and parents in the public school system.
- Instead of working together to understand the student's needs, teachers and parents often blame each other for educational failures.
- The lack of institutionalized coordination hinders the overall development of the students.

53. Solutions of Education Problems of Pakistan

1. Crescendo Approach

- Policy makers must move away from setting unrealistic targets that do not consider practical constraints, such as the attempt to equalize public and private schools within a single year.
- Instead of immediate shifts, the curriculum should be designed so that students can gradually become proficient in languages like English.
- Schools in villages and less developed cities should be systematically upgraded by hiring excellent professionals and introducing advanced facilities.

2. Availability of Facilities

- The government should prioritize providing basic necessities to public schools, including proper lighting, clean and friendly atmospheres, and hygienic latrines.
- Ensuring the availability of functional desks and modern teaching equipment is essential to removing physical obstructions to the basic learning process.

3. Efforts for Enhancement of Students' Enrollment

- The government must introduce specific initiatives to increase student enrollment, particularly at the primary level.
- Higher enrollment rates are viewed as a key indicator for the future progress and development of the Pakistani education sector.

4. To Overcome the Brain Drain

- The Higher Education Commission should implement a strategy of sending position-holding students abroad for advanced studies under strict observations and contracts.
- These contracts should require scholars to return to Pakistan after completing their degrees to serve the country, similar to strategies used by other developing nations.

5. Utilization of Elite Schools Scholars in Teaching

- Rather than abandoning elite schools, the government should effectively utilize their scholars by hiring them to teach in remote areas for a period of one year.
- These scholars should be tasked with improving the systems of remote schools and preparing reports on local educational issues.
- After their service, these individuals should be recognized at the national level to encourage a "brain gain" within the country.

6. Improvement in Hiring Process of Teachers

- The hiring process must be shifted from political patronage to pure merit.

- Hiring tests should be comprehensive, including a written test, an interview, and a mandatory demonstration to ensure that candidates possess the actual art of teaching.

7. Teacher Training Schools

- The government should improve its regional training centers to meet the needs of the entire teaching force.
- Public sector training should be brought up to the standard of elite school teacher training.
- The state should utilize trainers from elite schools to revamp the training menu for public school teachers.

8. Make Teachers' Job Attractive

- Teaching should be transformed from a temporary "time pass" job into a materially attractive profession.
- The government should announce competitive income packages and provide additional facilities, such as housing and transport assistance, particularly for those serving in remote areas.

9. Forming Complaint Desks

- Provincial governments should establish formal complaint desks in public schools.
- These desks would provide a necessary mechanism for parents to discuss their children's problems and ensure their grievances are heard by the administration.

10. Institutionalization of Parents-Teachers Coordination

- There is a critical need to bridge the divide between parents and teachers through institutionalized coordination.
- Teachers and parents should sit together to understand the specific needs of students rather than blaming each other for educational failures.
- Public schools should adopt formal calendars for parent-teacher meetings, similar to the systems used in private schools.

Fifth Part: Pakistan Relations with World

54. Pak-US Relations

Introduction

- Pakistan's diplomatic ties with the United States have historically been developed based on its own security perceptions and economic needs, while the U.S. has fostered the relationship based on national interests rather than friendship.
- Despite being a long-term ally, Pakistan has faced more sanctions from the U.S. than almost any other partner because the relationship has consistently been based on strategic interests rather than a genuine partnership.
- The "American connection" has constituted a fundamental factor in Pakistan's foreign policy for the greater part of its existence.

1. Historical Background

- The relationship has been a "chequered" one since its inception.
- Early ties were heavily influenced by the Cold War, as Pakistan's strategic geographic position made it a valuable partner in Western alliance systems designed to contain the spread of communism.

2. Pakistan Initial Survival and US Response

- In the 1950s, U.S. attention shifted toward Asia due to the Korean War, and the advent of the Eisenhower-Dulles team sought to build a "ring of containment" around the Sino-Soviet bloc.
- While India committed to non-alignment, Pakistan emerged as the inevitable regional ally for the U.S. in South Asia.

3. SEATO and CENTO Agreements

- Pakistan signed a Mutual Defense Agreement in 1954 and subsequently joined the South East Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO).
- It also joined the Baghdad Pact, which was later renamed the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) in 1959.
- While these pacts placed Pakistan in the U.S. sphere of influence, they were often seen as institutionally weak and failed to address Pakistan's primary security concerns regarding India.

4. The Agreement of Cooperation (1959)

- In March 1959, an additional Agreement of Cooperation was concluded in which the U.S. committed to the "preservation of the independence and integrity of Pakistan".
- The U.S. agreed to take "appropriate action," including the use of armed forces as mutually agreed upon, to assist the Government of Pakistan at its request.

5. U-2 Plane Incident

- The relationship faced a significant crisis when an American U-2 intelligence plane, which took off from Peshawar for its mission, was shot down by the Soviet Union.
- The Soviet leadership subsequently threatened Pakistan with serious consequences for permitting U.S. reconnaissance activities in the region.

6. War of 1965

- U.S. military assistance continued until the 1965 Indo-Pakistani War, at which point President Lyndon B. Johnson placed an embargo on arms shipments to both nations.
- Tensions were further exacerbated in the 1960s by Pakistan's developing ties with the People's Republic of China, which the U.S. viewed with friction.

7. Episode of 1971 War and US Attitude

- The Nixon administration viewed the 1971 crisis as an internal affair of Pakistan and refrained from open condemnation.
- President Nixon used Pakistan as a bridge to a rapprochement with China via Dr. Henry Kissinger's secret 1971 mission.
- Despite a publicized "tilt" toward Pakistan during the war, many Pakistani leaders felt betrayed that the U.S. did not prevent the country's dismemberment.

8. Bhutto's Attitude towards USA

- Zulfikar Ali Bhutto sought to lessen dependence on the U.S. by pursuing a policy of "bilateralism," which emphasized neutrality in the Cold War.
- During the Carter era, relations turned adversarial as Pakistan faced the cutoff of economic assistance due to its developing nuclear program.

9. General Zia Policy towards USA

- Zia officially left CENTO and joined the Non-Aligned Movement in 1979.
- Relations reached a low point that year when protesters sacked the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad following a false report that the U.S. was involved in a fire at the Grand Mosque in Mecca.

10. New Phase during Soviet Invasion of Afghanistan

- The 1979 Soviet invasion transformed Pakistan into a "front-line state" in the U.S. view.
- The Reagan administration provided massive aid packages, including US$3.2 billion in 1981 and US$4.0 billion in 1986.
- The war removed many U.S. legislative restrictions related to Pakistan's nuclear program.

11. Post 9/11 Incident

- Following the 9/11 attacks, Pakistan became a major ally in the War on Terror under pressure from the Bush administration.
- In exchange for cooperation, the U.S. forgave US$1 billion in debt in 2003 and initiated multifaceted assistance packages.

12. Pakistan as Non-NATO Ally

- Pakistan was designated a Major Non-NATO Ally (MNNA).
- This status provides military and financial advantages and a close strategic working relationship with American forces, though it does not include a mutual defense pact.

13. Military Aid from the United States

- Pakistan has received approximately $20 billion since 2001 in reimbursements and training programs.
- However, aid has often been conditional; for example, $300 million was withheld following the Osama bin Laden raid.

14. Recent Dimensions

- The relationship is currently defined by a significant trust deficit that hinders successful cooperation despite ongoing efforts to defeat terrorist organizations.
- Pakistan's geopolitical significance remains tied to its role in Afghanistan and its relationships with India and China.

15. Irritants in Pak-US Relations

- i. Nuclear Capability: The Pressler Amendment led to a total cutoff of aid in 1990 when the U.S. could no longer certify Pakistan did not possess a nuclear device.
- ii. War against Terrorism: The U.S. has often pressured Pakistan to "do more" while expressing suspicion regarding its commitment to the global campaign.
- iii. US attack on Military Posts: Repeated cross-border skirmishes on the Durand Line have soured relations and sparked hard-line public sentiment in Pakistan.
- iv. Case of Raymond Davis: The 2011 incident where a CIA contractor killed two Pakistanis in Lahore caused a substantial deterioration in relations.
- v. Haqqani Network: The U.S. has accused Pakistan of using the network as a "veritable arm" of the ISI, threatening unilateral action.

- vi. Death of Osama bin Laden: The May 2011 raid in Abbottabad, conducted without informing Pakistan, was seen as a violation of sovereignty and deepened mistrust.
- vii. Salala Incident: In November 2011, a NATO airstrike killed 24 Pakistani soldiers, leading Pakistan to close NATO supply routes and vacate the Shamsi Airfield.
- viii. US Tilt towards India: The U.S.-India civilian nuclear pact (2006) and strategic partnership are viewed in Pakistan as factors that disturb the regional balance of power.

Conclusion

- Pakistan is often described as the most difficult issue for the United States, as it is both a victim of terrorism and an "unhealthy ally".
- The Pakistani public remains incensed over violations of sovereignty, while the elected government and military leadership understand that national pride is as important as tangible national interests.
- The survival of the relationship depends on balancing these sentiments without letting rhetoric descend into hysteria.

55. Pakistan China Relations

Introduction

- Pakistan has enjoyed a remarkably close relationship with China almost from the very early years of its independence.
- Despite being ideologically far apart and occasionally belonging to opposite military blocs, the friendship is described as an "all-weather friendship" that is not subject to the vagaries of time.
- The relationship is based on mutuality of interest and complete trust, constituting a cornerstone of Pakistan's foreign policy.

1. Historical Background

- The connection with China has been a fundamental factor in Pakistan's foreign policy for the greater part of its existence.
- Traditionally, the driving factor for China was a hedge against India, while for Pakistan, it was a means of gaining access to civilian and military resources.
- The bilateral relationship is considered trust-bound and has survived major global realignments, including wars and invasions.

2. Recognition of Communist China

- In 1950, Pakistan became the third non-communist state and the first Muslim country to recognize the People's Republic of China.
- The recognition had a strong economic logic: in 1949, India stopped trading with Pakistan, prompting Pakistan to seek an alternative market for its raw jute and cotton and a supply source for coal.

3. Joining of SEATO and CENTO and Chinese Attitude

- Pakistan joined the Western pacts (SEATO and CENTO) in 1954 primarily due to threats from India.
- China accepted Pakistan's explanation that its membership was for national security and not directed against China.

- The two countries established a similarity of worldview during the Bandung Conference in 1955, where they resisted efforts by India to dominate the region.

4. Sino-Indian War (1962)

- The conflict arose over a boundary settlement dispute involving 90,000 square kilometers in the eastern sector and 38,000 square kilometers in the western sector.
- During the war, the U.S. and U.K. rushed military aid to India without consulting Pakistan.
- This lack of consultation by Western allies made Pakistan realize the urgent need to improve and solidify its relations with China.

5. Period of General Ayub Khan

- Deteriorating Sino-Indian relations provided new opportunities for Pakistan, leading to a border agreement in 1963 where China conceded over 750 square miles to Pakistan.
- A trade agreement and air services agreement were signed in 1963, ending China's virtual isolation by allowing PIA to fly to Shanghai in 1964.
- The Karakoram Highway was initiated during this era to link China's Xinjiang region with the Northern Areas of Pakistan.

6. War of 1965

- China provided critical military supplies and diplomatic support to Pakistan during the 1965 conflict with India.
- China issued a warning to India through the American Embassy in Poland, which is believed to have deterred India from attacking the lightly defended eastern wing of Pakistan.
- Chinese support shifted the relationship from a structured governmental plane to the "heart and thoughts of the people of Pakistan".

7. General Yahya Khan and China

- Pakistan served as a vital intermediary for the U.S.-China rapprochement, facilitating Henry Kissinger's secret mission to Beijing in July 1971.
- China supported Pakistan diplomatically during the 1971 war and used its veto in the UN to release 90,000 Pakistani POWs by delaying Bangladesh's entry into the organization.

8. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto inclination towards China

- China was the first country Bhutto visited officially after assuming power in December 1971.
- As the U.S. became an unreliable military supplier, Bhutto turned to China for acquiring the means of self-defense and technical collaboration.
- He sought to lessen dependence on the West by strengthening ties with China as part of his policy of "bilateralism".

9. Period of General Zia-ul-Haq

- The relationship expanded during the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan (1979-1989), where both countries cooperated against Soviet militancy.
- In 1986, a significant Treaty for Cooperation in Peaceful uses of Nuclear Technology was signed.
- Consultations between the two countries became frequent as Pakistan played the role of a "frontline state".

10. Cooperation during the period 1989-2001

- Relations grew as the U.S. and West imposed sanctions on Pakistan; China agreed to provide an additional nuclear power station (Chashma-II) in 1994.
- China remained a reliable source of defense equipment and reinforced ties in space technology and defense production.

11. Post 9/11 Sino-Pak Friendship

- Both countries became allies of the U.S. in the War on Terror, which transformed their respective relations with the United States.
- In the face of the U.S.-India strategic partnership, Pakistan and China deepened their ties to maintain a regional balance of power.
- In 2001, marking 50 years of relations, China announced support for mega projects like the Gwadar Port.

12. Pakistan as Economic Corridor

- i. Defense Equipment: China has provided nuclear technology, JF-17 Thunder aircraft, and ballistic missiles, becoming the "principal supplier" for the Pakistani weapons program.
- ii. Educational Exchanges: China offers annual scholarships for Ph.D. and MS students, while the International Islamic University offers seats to Chinese students.
- iii. Cultural Ties: A cultural agreement signed in 1965 covers arts, education, and youth affairs, with regular protocol renewals.
- iv. Economic Ties: Ties are based on economic development and access to maritime routes to secure China's energy supplies through the Persian Gulf.
- v. Chinese Projects: Major initiatives include the Saindak Copper-Gold Project, Chashma nuclear plants, and the Lakhra Coal project.
- vi. Karakoram Highway: Completed in 1986, it serves as a vital artery; China is committed to upgrading it to a double-track, year-round highway.
- vii. Construction of Gwadar: Construction began in 2002; it is intended to be a commercial hub and a "trade and energy corridor" for Western China.
- viii. Role in Balochistan: Includes the Saindak mine and Duddar zinc-led project, though these are sometimes points of contention with local nationalists.
- ix. Haier-Rub Economic Zone: Established in 2007 near Lahore, it is the first overseas Chinese special economic zone.
- x. Free Trade Area (FTA): Signed in 2006, it aimed to quintuple bilateral trade and facilitate Pakistani agricultural exports.

Conclusion

- Pakistan is a major beneficiary of China's peaceful development, which provides ready markets for Pakistani goods.
- The relationship has evolved into an indispensable partnership that facilitates Pakistan's objective of becoming a connecting hub for trade and energy in Asia.
- Despite global tectonic shifts, the uninterrupted and trust-bound nature of the bond ensures its continued permanence.

56. Pak-India Relations

Introduction

- Initial Intentions: Prior to partition, Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah expressed a desire for Pakistan to live peacefully and maintain cordial, friendly relations with its immediate neighbors.
- Antagonistic Reality: Despite being inheritors of rich cultures, the relationship has been defined by mutual antagonism that has plunged the two states into three wars.
- Central Irritant: A fundamental factor in Pakistan's foreign policy has been the continuous quest for security against India, centered largely on the unresolved status of Kashmir.

1. Historical Background

- Radcliffe Award: The partition process was marked by what the source describes as a "shameful demarcation" by the British.
- Loss of Strategic Territories: Pakistan lost several Muslim-majority districts in Punjab (Gurdaspur, Jullunder, Ferozpur, Ambala) to India. The loss of Gurdaspur was particularly significant as it provided India with a safe passage to Kashmir.
- Economic Impact: The award of Calcutta to India meant East Pakistan lost its only major port and over 90% of the industrial units of undivided Bengal.

2. Pakistan Search for Security

- Economic Logic of China Ties: In 1949, India stopped trading with Pakistan, prompting Pakistan to recognize Communist China in 1950 to find alternative markets for jute and cotton and a supply of coal.
- Alliance Systems: Due to the perceived threat from India, Pakistan felt obliged to join Western pacts like SEATO and CENTO in 1954 to secure national safety.
- Zero-Sum Diplomacy: Indian Prime Minister Nehru noted that if the two states followed contrary policies, they would eventually neutralize each other, making both vulnerable.

3. Period of General Ayub Khan

- Sino-Indian Conflict (1962): Deteriorating relations between India and China provided Pakistan with an opportunity to solidify its own ties with China.
- Border Agreement (1963): Pakistan and China successfully negotiated their boundary, with China conceding over 750 square miles to Pakistan—a move that India contested.
- Western Betrayal: During the 1962 war, the US and UK rushed military aid to India without consulting Pakistan, leading Ayub Khan to realize the need for independent diplomatic maneuvering.

4. War of 1965

- Origins: The war was triggered by Operation Gibraltar, a Pakistani campaign to stir a rising in Indian-held Kashmir following skirmishes in the Rann of Kutch.
- Chinese Support: China provided critical military supplies and put political pressure on India, warning them not to attack the lightly defended eastern wing of Pakistan.
- Tashkent Declaration (1966): The Soviet-mediated peace was extremely unpopular in Pakistan because it failed to address the core cause of the conflict: the Kashmir dispute.

5. War of 1971

- Dismemberment: India intervened militarily in support of secessionist forces in East Pakistan, leading to the creation of Bangladesh.
- Soviet-Indian Axis: The source identifies the Soviet Union as playing a decisive role by supporting India's military intervention.
- POW Crisis: Following the war, 93,000 Pakistani prisoners of war were held in Indian custody, used by India as bargaining chips during subsequent peace talks.

6. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's Indian Policy

- Simla Agreement (1972): Bhutto negotiated the return of POWs and a pledge for peace, though India viewed this as an agreement to keep the Kashmir issue as a bilateral matter to be kept on the "backburner".
- Nuclear Ambition: Following the loss of East Pakistan, Bhutto met with scientists in 1972 to develop a nuclear deterrent, famously stating Pakistanis would "eat grass" if necessary to acquire the bomb.

7. Russia Invasion of Afghanistan and Indian Attitude

- Indian Neutrality: In 1979, India refused to condemn the Soviet invasion, whereas Pakistan became a frontline state providing sanctuary for Afghan refugees and a conduit for arms to the Mujahideen.
- Strategic Threat: Pakistan felt an increased threat on both its eastern (India) and northwestern (Afghanistan) borders during this period.

8. Aftermath of 11/9 Incident

- Diplomatic Shift: Initially, the Bush administration tilted toward India, but the 9/11 attacks forced a realignment that brought Pakistan back to "center stage" as a major ally in the War on Terror.
- Indian Blame: India attempted to marginalize Pakistan by continuously accusing Islamabad of sponsoring terrorist attacks in India.

9. Irritants in Pak-India Relations

- Kashmir: Described as the crux of all difficulties, involving deep ideological antagonisms and centuries-old prejudices.
- Nuclear Race: The 1998 nuclear tests by both nations turned the region into a nuclear flashpoint, with India claiming the status of a legitimate nuclear power.
- Siachen Glacier: India occupied the glacier in 1984 in violation of the Simla Agreement; Pakistan considers this occupation illegal.
- Water Disputes: Disputes include the Wullar Barrage, the Kishan Ganga Dam, and the Baglihar Dam, all of which Pakistan views as violations of the 1960 Indus Waters Treaty.

10. Impacts of World Politics over Indo-Pak Relations

- US-India Strategic Partnership: The US sees India as a bulwark against China and a junior partner for its global agenda, leading to civilian nuclear deals that Pakistan feels disturb the regional balance.
- Nuclear Arms Race: These international realignments have given fresh impetus to a nuclear arms race, with Pakistan turning to China to "play catch-up" with India.

11. Conclusion

- Need for Dialogue: While military capability provides a boost to defense, the source warns that nuclear capability is not enough for national survival if the economy is fragile.

- Way Forward: The relationship requires a battle on political and ideological fronts rather than military means alone to resolve deep-seated grievances.
